Butte veterans Godtland and Grebb honored at presentation ceremony

By Robin Jordan

At a ceremony held Friday, Mar. 29, two Butte veterans, Harold "Pete" Godtland and Eileen Grebb were honored for their military service and for their continuing service to the community.

About 60 people attended at the Marine Corps League's "Hooch" as U.S. Rep. Greg Gianforte presented both Godtland and Grebb with the Montana Congressional Veteran Commendation, an award the congressman started two years ago.

Gianforte said the award recognizes outstanding veterans who have served their country and returned to serve in their communities. The veterans' commendations were read in the U.S. Congress and flags flown over the nation's capital in their honor were presented to them at the ceremony.

Godtland served in the U.S. Army during World War II as a member of the 7th Infantry Division in the Pacific Ocean theater. He fought at the Battle of Okinawa in 1945, persevering with his fellow infantrymen in the largest amphibious assault in the Pacific theater of World War II.

Godtland remained with the Army until 1946, returning home from his posting in Korea following the end of World War II.

Godtland routinely honors his fellow veterans as a bugler at military funerals as a member of the United Veterans Council's Honor Guard. He has also lent his musical talents to St. Timothy's Memorial Chapel Summer Music Festival at Georgetown Lake and has been a member of the Butte Symphony.

He also volunteers his time and expertise as an architect, providing designs for community projects such as the Spirit of Columbia Gardens Carousel, the Ridge Waters Waterpark, the Miner's Memorial at the World Museum of Mining and arches at that museum, at Montana Tech and at the Ulrich-Schotte Nature Trail.

Grebb joined the U.S. Navy in 1968 as a nurse and cared for American servicemen and women at home and abroad. She left active duty in 1984 but remained in the Individual Ready Reserve program until 1997, finishing her military career with the rank of Lieutenant Commander.

Grebb serves as Chaplain for Silver Bow American Legion Post 1 and has been an officer in the local and state chapters of the Disabled American Veterans. She has been a dedicated advocate for the Southwest Montana Veterans Home, slated for construction in 2019.

Grebb also helps give flu shots and works for the YMCA's Medical Exercise Program.

Westside Soils investigation to begin next month

By Robin Jordan

Starting in May, EPA contractors should begin sampling old mines and mine dumps in the area north of Walkerville and to the west of Montana Tech as the kick-off of the remedial investigation of the Superfund West Side Soils Operable Unit (WSSOU), according to Nikia Greene, Butte's EPA Remedial Project Manager.

However, the investigation will not be confined to just that area, Greene said, but will also include stormwater outflows to upper Silver Bow and Blacktail Creeks, including drainage from the Greeley neighborhood, and surface water sampling in Blacktail and Basin Creeks upstream of the Butte Priority Soils Operable Unit. That work is also scheduled to begin this year.

Greene gave a presentation to Butte-Silver Bow's council of commissioners last week to outline the initial phase of the investigation, which he said will be completed in two years.

He also sought to allay public concern about the undefined boundaries of the WSSOU, indicating that the scope of the area considered could be expanded to include the Flat and to include more land around the mining areas northwest of Butte.

Greene said the EPA's Record of Decision defines the WSSOU as generally including the area north and west of Butte because of 400 known mining claims there. However, the ROD also says the WSSOU includes areas outside of other operable units.

The contractor that will perform the work, CDM Smith, headquartered in Boston, MA, has leased a building on Montana Street for the next couple of years, Greene said, and will begin detailed sampling at all the larger abandoned mines, like the Bluebird, and large mine dumps northwest of Butte to determine the nature and extent of contamination.

Once this initial sampling is complete, the EPA will determine if there are data gaps or if confirmation sampling needs to be conducted. Expansion of the testing area will also be considered.

Greene said 150 letters have been sent to landowners north of Walkerville and west of Uptown seeking access to private property for sampling. So far, he said, about 100 have been returned and he's gotten about 10 emails, mostly asking more questions.

Another ongoing part of the investigation is determining who is legally responsible for cleanup cost of the contamination found. Atlantic Richfield owns some, but not most, of the property, Greene said.

A second area of study will be sources of contamination to Upper Silver Bow Creek and the Blacktail and Basin Creeks. Stormwater sampling will take place in spring and fall, the wettest and driest parts of the year. The study includes sampling storm sewer outfalls to Upper Silver Bow and Blacktail Creeks, including drainage from the Greeley area. Greene said the EPA could potentially collect other media samples, such as dust and soil, to determine if contamination is coming from historic mine waste in the district, although that work might be done in a second phase.

The EPA will also evaluate data collected under the Residential Metals Abatement Program (RMAP) from attic dust sampling currently

Bill Foley

An open letter to United States Secretary of Education Betsy DeVos: Madam Secretary, I would like you to meet my good friend Jalee Foley.

No, she is not related to me. Well, at least she is not closely enough related to me that I knew her at all until last May.

That's when Jalee introduced herself as the Special Olympics Torch made its way into Butte, Montana, via the Law Enforcement Touch Run.

"Hey," Jalee said as she walked up to me. "We have the same last name."

Jalee paused for a minute, as if she was not sure I knew what she was talking about. Then she smiled and slowly said, "Foley."

Since then, Jalee and I have become pals, and there is not a finer person around. With one look into her eyes, you can see that. Like the Special Olympians she competes with and against, Jalee's eyes immediately

BUTTE SPORTS

Those Olympians are called 'Special' for a reason give you a glimpse into the goodness that is in her heart.

Special Olympians, you see, are pure innocence, and they never try to hide or shy away from that awesome quality.

Jalee is a devoted Special Olympian, too.

When she's not working hard as the trainer for Butte High's basketball teams, Jalee is almost always training to compete in the Special Olympics.

It doesn't matter if it is skiing, track, basketball or whatever, Jalee is prepared and ready to go.

Basketball seems to be Jalee's favorite sport, and she will proudly play her heart out as a member of the Butte Rats when the Special Olympics basketball tournament comes to town later this year.

If she does not lead her team in scoring, you better believe she will be No. 1 in celebrations. Jalee celebrates the game like a champ.

You would know that if you saw her play to the crowd as she ran off the court following the Special Olympics portion of the Burgman/Boyle Alumni Classic last August at Butte High's Richardson Gym. Jalee helped lead the Purple People Eaters to a 38-26 win over Team Awesome.

When you, Madam Secretary, proposed cutting all federal funding for the Special Olympics, you attacked Jalee, whether you meant to or not.

That is why I think you would really benefit from meeting her or some of the many of the other Special Olympians from every town in America.

Go watch a Special Olympics competition, and you will see an exhibition of sportsmanship at its finest. There is no cheating. No taunting. No steroids. It is just spirited competition where both sides leave the arena with a smile.

The Special Olympics are what all sports should be.

Actually, they are more than that. Those Olympians can give the rest of us examples of how we can all make the world a better place.

Special Olympians get along with everybody. They have no enemies.

In case you haven't noticed, the political divide in our country grows larger by the day, and you, Madam Secretary, have constantly thrown gasoline on the flames of division.

This time, though, the rest of us are all on the same side opposing you. If there is one thing we can all agree on, it is that the Special Olympics should continue to be the shining example of the human spirit.

Nobody wants to see those games go away. Nobody on the left, nobody on the right and nobody in between wants them cut back one cent.

Hopefully you got a sense of that when your boss threw you under the bus and reversed the decision to so callously cut the Special Olympics funding.

Facebook could not even get us to fight over that decision, and that says a lot.

One of my Facebook friends in particular loves to argue politics with me and I'm not too hard to bait into an online sparring match. All of his political posts and comments make me want to pull my hair out, and I know the feelings are completely mutual.

Yet, when I announced I was taking part in the Torch Run for the Special Olympics last year, he was the first person I heard from. He sent me a pledge of $500 for the cause.

He said he did not want any fanfare or thank you notes. He said to just consider the money as a gift from a successful night playing cards.

My political opposite simply agreed that the gold, silver and bronze of the Special Olympics rise above the red and blue of our daily arguments.

The Special Olympics are so very important to the Special athletes, too. When they graduate from high school, there isn't a whole lot out there to keep them busy, and their over-stressed parents can only do so much.

That's where the Special Olympics come in. They help fill a major void in the lives of the athletes.

We need more Special events because the Special Olympics just make life so much better. They undoubtedly improve the lives of the Special Olympians along with those who are lucky enough to be touched by Olympians.

So, Madam Secretary, I dare you to come to town to meet Jalee. Or Zach Stenson. Or Cal Berryman. Or Peyton Tippet. Or Bryce Baily. Bryce is a young man so happy that you will instantly see why his nickname is "Smiley."

You tweeted a while back that you did visit some Special Olympians, but you must not have paid attention. Otherwise, you never would have put your name behind that cruel proposed cut.

Putting the Special Olympians on the chopping block should have never been an option to any person, not even a person with a heart that is clearly three sizes too small.

I am sure you are well aware of the fact that you are a billionaire many times over. You could pay for the Special Olympics out of your own pocket, and for you it would not be as painful as a janitor throwing a couple of bucks in the collection plate on Sunday.

Actually, maybe you could dip into your personal pocket and double the annual budget for the Special Olympics.

You can certainly afford it. It also might be your only hope to stave off the incredibly horrible karma you have built up in the last week.

At the very least, though, go visit some Special Olympians. I mean truly visit with them.

Watch them play. Listen to their stories. Soak up their passion for life. Make sure you look deeply into their eyes and take in that innocence.

If really you do that, you will never think of cutting funding for the Special Olympics ever again.

You will probably find that going to the mirror to look into your own eyes will be much easier, too.

New firewood permits available

New Forest Service firewood permits went on sale beginning April 1. The annual permit allows firewood cutting April 1, 2019 through March 31, 2020.

The cost of a firewood permit from the Beaverhead-Deerlodge National Forest is $20 for a minimum purchase of four cords. Additional cords may be purchased for $5 per cord up to a total of 12 cords per individual per year.

A cord is the amount of tightly piled wood in a stack four feet high by four feet wide by eight feet long. The permit allows woodcutters to remove downed timber or to cut down standing dead trees under most conditions in the national forests and grasslands in Montana, northern Idaho, and parts of North and South Dakota, and on lands administered by the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) in Montana and northern Idaho. If you plan to gather firewood from other National Forests or lands administered by the BLM, contact that forest or BLM office for their firewood gathering guidelines.

Woodcutters are reminded to be safe while cutting and gathering wood; keep vehicles on designated roads and trails; be sure your chosen location for cutting wood is not within the designated right of way of any major road or interstate; and please don't drive off designated roads.

For more information, check the firewood permit and the Forest Service's firewood handout available from agency offices and at www.fs.usda.gov/bdnf. Beaverhead-Deerlodge NF offices are in Wisdom, Philipsburg, Butte, Dillon, Ennis, Sheridan, and Wise River. Permits may also be purchased from Bureau of Land Management offices in Butte and Dillon. Try to Avoid "Titanic" Investment Mistakes

It's been 107 years this month since the tragedy of the Titanic. Of course, this disaster has fascinated the world ever since, leading to books, movies, musicals and, ultimately, a successful search for the big ship's remains. On the positive side, commercial shipping lines learned a great deal from the Titanic, resulting in safer travel across the oceans. And as an investor, you, too, may be able to draw some important lessons from what happened on that cold April night more than a century ago.

So, to avoid some "titanic" investment mistakes, consider the following:

Create a financial strategy with a solid foundation. Although considered a technological marvel, the Titanic had some real structural, foundational flaws – such as compartments that weren't fully watertight. To withstand the inevitable rough seas ahead, your investment strategy needs a strong foundation, based on your needs, goals, family situation, risk tolerance and time horizon.

Be receptive to advice. The Titanic's crew had received plenty of Marconi wireless warnings from other ships about ice in the area. Yet they did not take precautions, such as slowing down. When you invest, you can benefit from advice from a financial professional – someone who can caution you when you're making dangerous moves, such as pursuing inappropriate investments, which could ultimately damage your prospects for success.

Be prepared for anything. The Titanic had far fewer lifeboats than it needed, resulting in a tragic loss of life that could have been prevented. As an investor, you need to be prepared for events that could jeopardize your financial well-being, and that of your family. So, at a minimum, you need to maintain adequate life and disability insurance. And it's also a good idea to build an emergency fund containing six to 12 months' worth of living expenses, with the money kept in a liquid, low-risk account

Don't overreact to perceived threats. When the iceberg loomed directly ahead, the Titanic's crew frantically tried to steer clear of it. While this move was understandable, it inadvertently hastened the ship's demise, because it exposed a more vulnerable part of the hull to the huge ice mass. When you invest, you might also be tempted to overreact when facing perceived dangers – for example, if the financial markets plunge, you might think about selling your stocks. This is often a bad idea, especially if you're taking a big loss on your sales. If your investments are still fundamentally solid, you might well be better off by staying patient and waiting for the markets to recover.

Give yourself time to reach your goals. Edward J. Smith, the Titanic's captain, apparently wanted to break speed records on the Atlantic crossing – and this desire may have contributed to his somewhat reckless passage through fields of ice. As an investor, you could also run into problems if you rush toward a goal. To illustrate: If you wanted to retire at 65 with a certain amount of money, but you didn't start saving and investing until you reached 55, you'd likely have to put a lot more away each year, and possibly invest a lot more aggressively, than if you had started investing when you were 30.

Put to work some of the Titanic's lessons – they might help you improve your chances of smooth sailing toward all your important financial goals.

How can Butte break through apathy, misconceptions about Superfund?

By Robin Jordan

Last week, EPA's Butte remedial project manager, Nikia Greene gave a presentation outlining the first phase of investigation of Butte's Westside Soils Operable Unit to Butte-Silver Bow's Council of Commissioners. One of the actions in the plan is to develop a community action plan, which brings up an interesting problem:

How can EPA engage citizens in Superfund discussion and get factual information to the public about the past, present and future actions? Can the EPA establish meaningful communication with the public so people will share what they know about historic pollution sources, allow sampling on their property and give feedback on plans for cleanup as they develop?

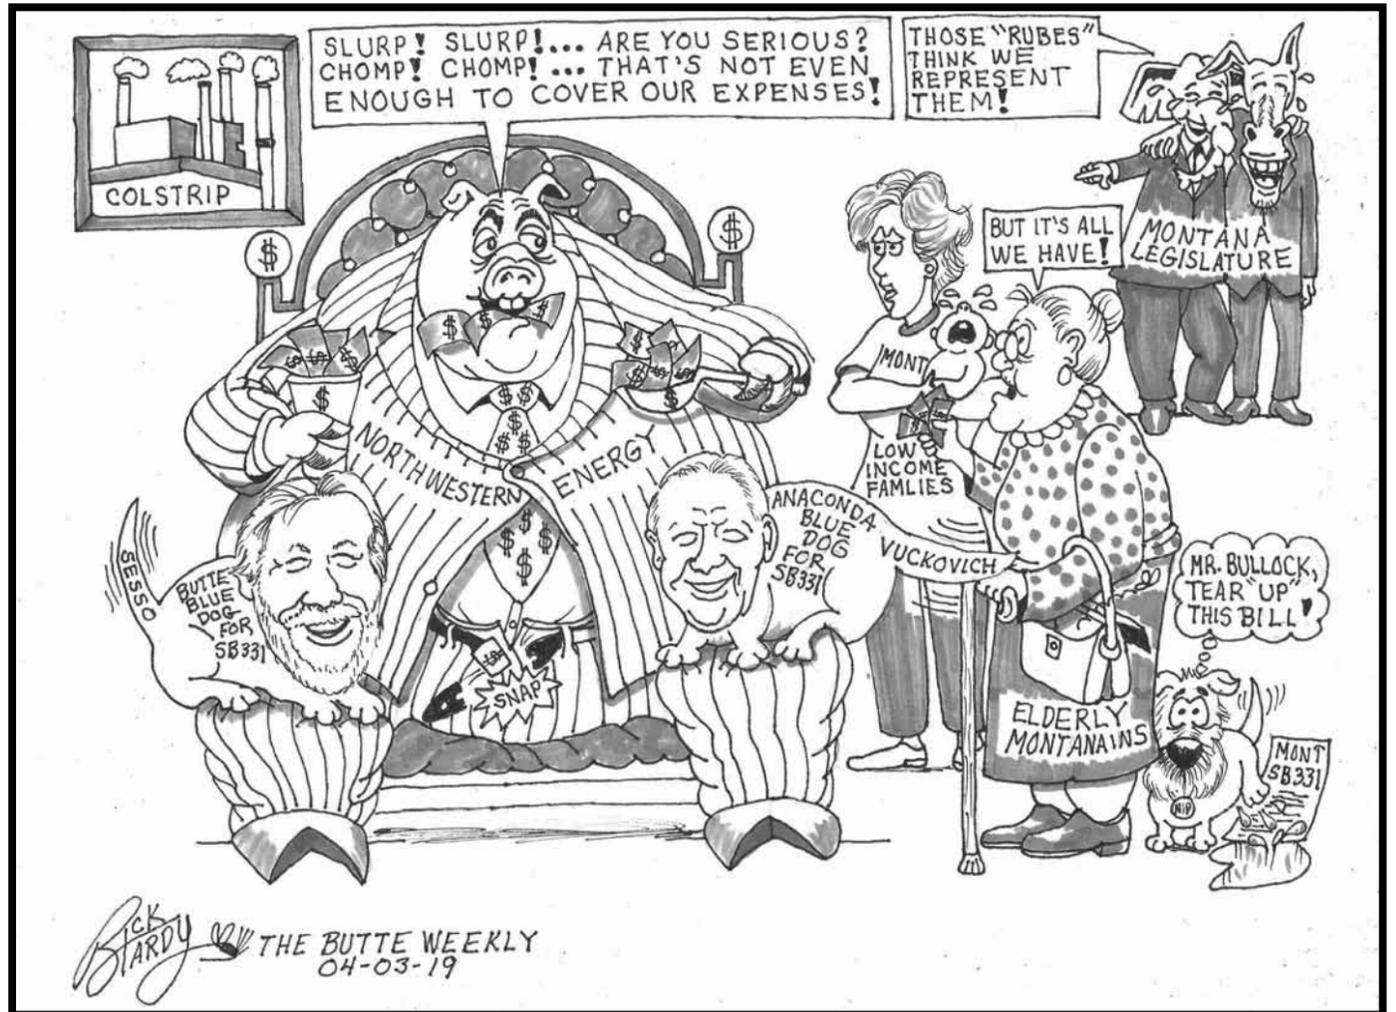

Judging by some of the discussion by commissioners after Greene's presentation, a lot of information about how the Superfund process works, what's been done, what's ongoing and what lies in the future isn't getting to the public. Many misconceptions persist and there's a general public distrust of the EPA and other parties involved in cleanup efforts.

Some of the confusion and distrust comes from confidentiality agreements governing negotiations between potentially responsible parties in working toward a consent decree for the Butte Priority Soils Operable Unit. However, in May 2018, a judge lifted a portion of the gag order and most of the plans for cleanup of the area around Upper Silver Bow Creek from west of Montana Street to Texas Avenue were made public through multiple meetings. Public workshops allowed participation in choosing recreational features that will be part of the final design for the reclaimed Creekside areas. That design was revealed at a public meeting as well.

As one commissioner, Dan Callahan, pointed out, not many people--and not many of the other commissioners--attend those meetings. Even if the EPA and other agencies advertise through multiple media outlets and on social media, people find it hard to make time for public meetings. Or, they're not interested. Or, they don't see how Superfund affects them personally.

Local media have spent a lot of ink and airtime on recent Superfund developments in Butte, but not all people read or watch local news, apparently, with all the news source choices available today.

It was heartening to hear Greene say that part of the EPA's outreach effort in developing a community action plan. As any politician who has knocked doors will tell him, it's going to be a long, grueling effort, but it pays to talk to citizens one by one.

Greene also committed himself to addressing the Butte-Silver Bow council of commissioners more frequently and making sure they are "the first to know" about any Superfund developments. While we don't think this should let commissioners off the hook to get out and occasionally attend meetings of other groups that discuss Superfund issues, we think going through the council is a good idea. For one thing, the council meetings are public--anyone can attend--and they are streamed live on the county's website. This gives the public an easy way to keep up on what's happening.

But, we think Greene will find, as many of us have, that old myths and misconceptions die hard. Old negative perceptions about the EPA and about cleanup efforts in general. Some folks miss the old days when there seemed to be an "us and them" mentality about environmental cleanup and they just can't believe that things have changed, despite the evidence of the last year.

Good luck, Nikia. It's a good thing that you love your job. It's a tough one.

Will Democrats Surrender the Rule of Law?

By George Waring

Several weeks ago, I publicized a column by Ralph Nader written immediately after the Senate confirmation of William Barr as Attorney General, a confirmation process where Senate Democrats had preferred "to be polite and in so doing let the American people down."

Nader had reviewed Barr's career as a toady for GHW Bush during the Iran-Contra scandal and his writings "asserting that the President can start any wars he wants even if Congress votes against them!"

For Nader, Barr's career had been as "a long-time defender of executive branch lawlessness." He even wrote that Barr's view of the separation of powers was to separate Congress from its constitutional powers and hand them over to the unitary presidency: "Barr's inflexible position giving Presidents effective immunities for obstructing justice and from blocking ongoing investigations, including limitless pardons even of himself and his family."

Do we now we have evidence of Barr's anti-democratic ideology? He has usurped the powers of Congress by keeping the Mueller Report to himself and forcing the press to write stories about his four-page summary as "The Barr Report." His current loyalty to Trump has given the President the opportunity to reiterate, "No collusion, no obstruction of justice, and a full exoneration!"

So, are we on the verge of a constitutional crisis where the powers of Congress will be ignored by the Executive Branch? And the Supreme Court must decide whether the words of the Constitution or Barr's conception of the "unitary presidency" comes to define the Trump presidency. Scary.

In the March 24th edition of the New York Times, Neal K. Katyal, an acting solicitor general under President Barack Obama and presently is a law professor at Georgetown University, indicated he shared the same fear about William Barr and those expressed by Ralph Nader. Katyal enjoys a special viewpoint in his criticism of Barr because he actually drafted the special counsel regulations under which Robert Mueller was appointed.

His opinion piece bore the lengthy title, "By unilaterally concluding that Mr. Trump did not obstruct justice, the attorney general has made it imperative that the public see the Mueller report".

Katyal lists a number of reasons why Trump's pronouncements of "No collusion, no obstruction of justice, and a full exoneration!" were premature.

First, Trump is being investigated in New York concerning campaign finance violations and numerous illegal activities related to the Trump organization.

Second, Barr has acknowledged that the Mueller report "does not exonerate" Mr. Trump on the issue of obstruction of justice.

Third, Barr claims that Mueller left it to the attorney general to decide whether Trump's conduct described in the report constituted a crime." And then, Barr immediately concludes Trump didn't obstruct justice when he fired Comey. Katyal wonders how Barr could have reached that conclusion within 48 hours of receiving Mueller's report.

Katyal tell us that "the special counsel regulations were written to provide the public with confidence that justice was done." It is impossible for the public to have this confidence without knowing what Mueller reported. Barr's rush to judgment "within 48 hours, after a 22-month investigation, is deeply worrisome."

Katyal concludes his lengthy, highly critical column of William Barr by noting that, in his opinion, Barr had tried to enshrine his idiosyncratic view of presidential power into the law, and therefore, "bar Mr. Trump's prosecution."

Barr's "unsolicited memo should be understood for what it is, a badly argued attempt to put presidents above the law. If he used that legal fiction to let President Trump off the hook, Congress would have to begin an impeachment investigation to vindicate the

When the Darkness Rolls Away
Chad Okrusch

It's been a long, cold winter. And dark too. As someone who has spent most of his life in the Summit Valley and weathered decades of high-mountain northern winter, I know this is nothing new. It has always been this way. Yet, each year I'm affected. Will, reason, family, friends--and making music--give me brief moments of relief. But inevitably, the darkness settles in and weighs heavy on my body and mind.

This winter nearly broke me, again.

Near January's end, just after my 46th birthday, my adult daughters intervened. They sat me in a chair in my divorced dad rental living room--a truly depressing scene in itself--and loved me in word and deed. Wise beyond their years, they didn't judge me or try and cheer me up. They just loved me and let me know that I matter to them. They reminded me of who I am and what I mean to them and to all those who love me. They let me know that they've seen this pattern for years. Every January I break. And, they asked me not to give up--to keep searching. Depression is real, normal even. And, there are ways to cope with it.

Of course, I know all this. But, in the throes of it, what we know matters less than what we feel. I've taken medications, sat through dozens of hours of talk-therapy, adjusted my diet, exercised. I've done all of the things. Still, each winter, I sink deeply into a strange and heavy existence.

Each morning I wake, wear the heaviness like a blanket, and slog through the day. Some mornings, I choose not to wake at all, but to rest in the strange solace hurting people find in unconsciousness. Life seems to hurt less when you're sleeping.

They begged me to carry on. Looking into their eyes, which are my eyes, awakened something in me. Sleep and slog are no ways to spend those few precious moments we are graced with. Today, this moment, is all we have. Each heartbeat and breath is sacred. I know, and have always known, all of this. But, something in their eyes set a spark to my dying embers, and there and then, I chose life.

It may seem strange to share such a private moment with the world, but I know I'm not the only one who wears winter heavily. I know I'm not the only person who struggles with the actuality of depression, and the social stigma associated with mental dis-ease. Hiding in the darkness, lonely and afraid, only leads to deeper and darker existence. Bringing things to light, even the dim and short light of winter days, is the only path to hope and growth and change. For these reasons, and for all the others who may be struggling today, I write this. I care not about the judgement of those who do not suffer as we do. I only hope that someone might see truth in my words and decide as I have to carry on--to keep trying.

As winter turns to spring and days get longer, I find hope in small things: the emergence of the crocus, and the first buds on the aspen trees. Soon, they will flower and quake. And, so will we, provided we keep on and continue to reach out and into the buzzing blooming lifeworld. The sacred gifts of heartbeat and breath allow us to reach out so that we might touch each other. Hope lives here.

If you struggle now, keep struggling. It means you're alive. And, know that with each trip around the sun, there always comes a moment when there is more light than darkness. Here along the Great Divide, it takes longer, but it still happens as surely dusk turns to dawn. It reminds me of a beautiful lyric from Kate Wolf's song, Across the Great Divide:

*The finest hour that I have seen
Is the one that comes between
The edge of night and the break of day
It's when the darkness rolls away*

Somewhere beneath the snow, the crocus are pushing through. They'll turn the heavy snow blanket into leaf and flower, and so will we. Here's to spring, and to hope, and to light, and to love. Wake up, it's time to live again.

rule of law."

For Katyal, "Congress now has a clear path of action. It must first demand the release of the Mueller report, so that Americans can see the evidence for themselves. Then, it must call Mr. Barr and Mr. Mueller to testify. Mr. Barr in particular must explain his rationale for reaching the obstruction judgment he made."

He concludes, "No one wants a president to be guilty of obstruction of justice. The only thing worse than that is a guilty president who goes without punishment. The Barr letter raises the specter that we are living in such times."

I return to Ralph Nader's warning: Barr has a long career of defending executive branch lawlessness, from Iran-Contra through the invasion of Iraq. It is up to this Congress to stop Barr's attempt to legalize his longed for kingship.

What's Cooking

Montana Flour Mills Kuchen

By Debbie Sorensen

The recipe story line continues on here. I'm still researching some of the story on the Montana Flour Mills in Great Falls. I'll tell you, it has become quite an adventure in seeking out the folks "from my past" who know the scoop (if you will) on the mills. Like so many other questions we start asking as we look into what was years ago, I'm saying to myself, "why didn't I ask that question to Uncle Joe?"

Anyway, I'm thinking of Mrs. Kleffner and the wonderful baked goods she treated us to. Kuchen isn't her Kalachy, but that's what I'm smelling right now. Using the basic Sweet Roll Dough recipe from my column last week, you can add this delicious bread to your list of baking. From the "How to Bake ... The Sapphire Way," Montana Flour Mills Co., Great Falls, Montana.

Apple Kuchen

Basic Sweet Roll Dough recipe ½ tsp. cinnamon
Apples (quarters or eighths) 1 c. brown sugar
2 T. flour (amount varies depending on the juiciness of the apples)

Place mixture of sugar, cinnamon, flour in greased 9"x13" pan. Put thick slices of apple on top of the mixture. Over apples place a piece of dough, rolled into a rectangle ½ inch thick, coming just to edge of pan. Brush with melted butter. Let rise until light. Bake on lower shelf of oven for 30 minutes at 350°. Let pan cool until syrup thickens. Invert on cake rack, with wax paper placed under it to catch drips. (Use other fruits of your choice with brown or granulated sugar for variety.)

underway.

As a side note, Greene said he anticipates learning in the next couple of weeks whether the RMAP will be expanded to extend soil testing in areas outside the Butte Priority Soils Operable Unit. The program was previously expanded to offer attic dust sampling and cleanup to homes outside the BPSOU but not soil in yards.

Surface water sampling will be conducted on Blacktail and Basin Creeks upstream of the BPSOU, Greene said, in part because an area just upstream of Harrison Avenue regularly exceeds acceptable levels of metals, primarily copper and zinc during storm events and the source of contamination is unknown.

Early this summer, Greene said, the EPA will start development of a community involvement plan, which will include conducting community interviews and gathering input for further community engagement. Greene said the EPA has difficulty disseminating information to the public, in part because people won't show up for public meetings.

Greene said the EPA does support efforts to create a Greeley neighborhood focus group composed of different authorities, such as the Montana DEQ, EPA and others, to address questions about mine dust and stormwater issues. He said David Hutchins of the Citizens Technical Environmental Committee has offered to facilitate such a group.

Just Breathe

In last week's column, we talked about the benefits of Yoga and how it can increase well-being and happiness. The breathing during a Yoga class produces much of the benefit. If you are not inclined to take a Yoga class but would like to experience the relaxation and better sleep that comes from basic breathing exercises, I am outlining some of these below.

The first thing to examine is how we breathe most of the time, and especially when we are busy and stressed. It tends to be in our upper chest and not in our abdomen. These shallow breaths tend to increase our stress level and make us feel even more anxious. Fortunately, stopping and taking some deep belly breaths is something you can do anywhere. Once mastered, you can do belly breathing wherever you are, even in traffic if it is stressful, and it is very calming.

To acquaint or reacquaint yourself with this kind of breathing, find a comfortable quiet place and sit or lie down. Place one hand on your belly and one on your chest. Take a slow, deep breath through your nose, feeling the hand on your belly rise as you fill your lungs with air. The hand on your chest should not move very much. Pause when you have taken in all the air you can and then exhale through your nose, pushing your belly in to release any stale air left in your lungs. Repeat several times.

Another very basic breath that is used for focus and relaxation is even breathing. Simply pay attention to your breath and count to four slowly as you breathe in and then count to four again as you breathe out. Once you are used to this, you can gradually lengthen both the inhale and the exhale to six and then eight counts.

This basic breath can then be varied to help you relax or to energize you. If you are tense and want to relax or go to sleep, inhale for four counts and exhale for eight counts. To help with getting energized anytime you feel tired, breathe in for eight counts and out for four.

To take the basic even breath one step further, and when you are in a place where you can close your eyes and concentrate, you can breathe in a square. Imagine a square in your mind and breathe in for four counts as you visualize going up the side of the square, hold the breath for four counts going across the top, exhale for four going down the other side, and hold for four going across the bottom and repeat.

Since breathing in a square takes more concentration, it can be useful before going to sleep at night. It helps to take our minds off the stressors in our lives that can keep us awake. Also, the more relaxed we are before going to sleep, the more likely we are to sleep soundly through the night.

Another very calming technique, also with eyes closed, is visualization. Sitting or lying down, take some deep belly breaths, or even breaths and when you are comfortable and relaxed, focus on a scene in your mind that makes you feel happy and calm. Look for all the details of your scene and concentrate on them, imagining that you are there and stay for as long as you like. This can also help you sleep when performed at bedtime.

If you are already familiar with basic breathing techniques or would like to learn more advanced breathing techniques, you can find them in a book or on-line. Most of us can use a break from the stress in our lives. We can also benefit from learning to better handle stressful situations. The next time you are riled up or you notice you are tense and anxious, sit down, breathe deeply and feel the tranquility take over!

Year's first fishing trip a winner

By Paul Vang

I'd been anxious for this day. It was a long time since my last fly-fishing outing last September, and over two months since my last hunting outing. This gap between hunting and fishing seasons can be a long one, and this year seemed especially long.

It wasn't that I wasn't getting outside, of course. Through February and early March I got a lot of exercise shoveling and blowing snow and many weeks I made a trip to Discovery Basin ski area and enjoyed exceptionally good snow conditions.

Still, I was overdue for a day on a river. In most years I often have an outing in late February or early March, depending on the weather.

The day finally came. We'd had the Vernal Equinox, with longer days and enough energy behind the afternoon sun to warm things up. I'd finished my writing assignments for the week and, as a bonus, filed my taxes, so caught up on obligations and with a good weather forecast, my black Lab, Kiri, and I headed for the lower Madison River, one of my favorite early season destinations for fly-fishing.

I usually don't have expectations of catching fish on these first outings. The water is, typically, super cold and there isn't much insect activity, and the trout are sluggish.

Still, there is always the possibility of fishing action and that's good enough.

In most years, the lower Madison River as it emerges from Beartrap Canyon, is a good place to find spring. Typically, in late March, the snow is gone and there are shoots of green here and there.

This time, the biggest challenge was finding an access point that wasn't blocked by snow.

Incidentally, I wasn't the only person looking for fish. Fishing guides and clients were putting drift boats in and other anglers were wading the river. That comes as no surprise. I've never been to the lower Madison without seeing other anglers.

In my first walk in the river, I didn't have any action, though a couple other guys caught a few fish that were feeding on midges.

I also discovered that my waders had some tiny leaks, so my feet got damp and chilled, and a lunch break and time to thaw toes seemed appropriate.

After a lunch break Kiri and I worked our way upstream, still not having any fishing action. We came to a spot where a tributary stream empties into the Madison. I recalled from an outing some 20 years ago with the late Sylvester Nemes, his saying that this spot can be really productive.

I cast my fly, a small beadhead nymph, into the current and, surprise! I was hooked on to a small rainbow trout. I landed and released the fish and cast again. And I had another fish on the line, pretty much a carbon copy of the first one. Then a third and then a fourth fish. I had to change flies a couple times because of hooking a snag, and then pinching my tippet, not the hook, in releasing a fish.

I thought, Let's go for ten. Then a dozen.

By the time the fish in the little run had caught on that something phony was going on with these free lunches, I'd caught and released some 19 rainbow trout, all running around 6 to 10 inches.

There was a grin on my face as I trudged back to the access point and stowed gear for the trip back home. As mentioned previously, I usually don't have high expectations for my first outings of the year and certainly not for racking up a big catch.

While I had fun on this trip, there were other bonuses. For a few hours, there was respite from Congress, the Lege, the unending news cycle. The river and the fish that live there don't know or care about politics, scandals and the like.

Standing in 37 degree water, there is just the river, a flyrod and a fly on the end of the line, with the success of the whole enterprise depending on the whim of a fish.

Mining Museum Meanderings

By Larry Hoffman

By the time you are reading this, the World Museum of Mining should have opened for the 2019 season April 1st. I make the statement with caution, since this winter has been doozy and it has been snowing all day as I write this last Friday. The forecast for the first couple of April days includes a 50% chance of snow. The weather is always good underground for the tours but getting to the entrance may be a messy proposition. We want you to visit the Museum but call 723-7211 ahead of time for the latest conditions.

This week I thought a good topic for this week would be "nippers".

The term is from old English, a boy helper in a time when there were no child labor laws. Mechanization was also minimal, so there were plenty of menial jobs that kids could do to "earn their keep". Children were expected to contribute to the family, starting at an early age.

In mining, the term refers to boys too young to mine who made sure the miners had the tools and supplies they needed. As long as a boy was husky enough to do the work, which was often brutal from today's point of view, he could apply for a nipper job in the mines. There was no age check, so it wasn't uncommon for boys as young as twelve to be working as nippers.

Breaking rock loose from Mother Earth requires tools, from picks and pry bars to drilling steel. Inevitably, those tools become dull and need to be sharpened or exchanged for new ones. The tools had to be forged on the surface, where the heat and gases from blacksmithing could be vented into the open air. Transporting the tools back and forth from the surface to the farthest reaches of a mine was the job of the nippers, who kept the miners supplied from the earliest days until the 1930's.

The Butte mines were deep, hot, and a maze of horizontal and vertical workings, lit only by candle light for the nippers, even after the advent of the carbide light. There was no personal protective equipment for miners or nippers, such as hard hats or steel-toed boots, they wore street clothes in the worst places underground. Even gloves are rarely seen in the old photos.

The sharp tools were delivered to each mine at the shaft collar "sheets". The nippers would mingle with the miners, who would tell them what they needed and where. Once the mining crew was lowered, the nippers would load drill steel, picks, shovels and other tools on the cage to be sent down to each of the working levels where other boys would unload them on the stations. All the nippers would then go underground to their assigned levels and begin distributing tools to the working places.

From the shaft, tools were loaded onto flat cars and pushed for hundreds, even thousands, of feet. At each active working place, the nippers, usually working as pairs, would deliver fresh tools and take away the dull ones. Fairly easy to do in a drift or crosscut on the level, but most working places were in stopes, as much as 200 feet above or below the level.

Hundreds of pounds of steel had to be hoisted up or lowered by rope, hand over hand. Once for sharp, again for dull. Many of these places were over 110 degrees, with very poor ventilation, the oxygen being consumed by the sulfide ore being mined, as well as the men. The nippers would have been gasping for breath, soaked with sweat, as they did their job in most places.

The process was reversed for bringing the dull tools back to the surface for re-sharpening. The flat cars were never empty. In the early days, these were 10 and 12-hour shifts.

Probably most miners were nippers who grew into the job, with a great deal of practical experience under their belts from seeing all aspects of the underground workings as they went from one heading to another. The miners were very protective of their young helpers, but at the same time had their own, even harder, jobs to do. Accidents were all too common in the darkness lit only by flickering candle light.

On September 3rd, 1911, eight nippers at the Black Rock mine got on a cage at the end of their shift with a load of dull drill steel to get to the surface ahead of the rest of the shift. Strictly against rules but a common practice. On the way to the surface the drill steel tangled with the shaft timber and ground the boys to pieces. (Copper Camp)

Look around at boys today, in middle or high school, and imagine them being nippers in the mines. It's a sobering experience.

This Week In Labor History

"Labor is prior to, and independent of, Capital. Capital is only the fruit of Labor, and could never have existed if Labor had not first existed. Labor is superior to Capital, and deserves much the higher consideration."
-Abraham Lincoln, Progressive Republican President

Wednesday, April 3:

Socialist Mayor Pietro Botto of Haledon, N.J., invited the Paterson silk mill strikers to assemble in front of his house. 20,000 showed up to hear speakers from the IWW, Upton Sinclair, John Reed and others, who urged them to remain strong in their fight. The Patterson strike lasted from Feb. 1 - July 28. Workers were fighting for the 8-hour workday and less deadly working conditions. Over 1800 workers were arrested during the strike, including IWW leaders Big Bill Haywood and Elizabeth Gurley Flynn. 5 strikers were murdered to protect the wealth and profits of the greedy Capitalists. -1913

Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. returns to Memphis to stand with striking AFSCME sanitation workers. This evening, he delivers his famous "I've Been to the Mountaintop" speech in a church packed with Union members. He is assassinated the following day. -1968

Thursday, April 4:

Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. is assassinated in Memphis, where he had been supporting a sanitation Union workers' strike. In the wake of this tragedy, riots break out in many cities, including Washington, D.C. -1968

1,700 United Mine Workers members in Virginia and West Virginia beat back concessions demanded by Pittston Coal Co. - 1989

Friday, April 5:

80,000 march in 5th Avenue funeral for the Triangle Shirtwaist victims, NY. The 146 workers, mostly young women, were burned alive or jumped to their death when a fire broke out. The bosses locked all doors during work hours to protect profits. The two owners cashed their fire insurance check and retired rich men. -1911

 29 coal miners die in the Upper Big Branch Mine explosion - the worst US mining disaster in 40 years. A "catastrophe waiting to happen," the mine was cited for more than 1,300 safety violations from 2005 through 2010, with 50 citations in the 30 days leading up to the deadly West Virginia coal mine disaster. The greedy mine owners deliberately put profits before the safety of the workers. -2010

Saturday, April 6:

The first slave revolt in the U.S. occurs at a slave market in New York City's Wall Street area. 21 blacks were executed. The city responded by strengthening its slave codes. -1712

U.S. enters WWI, declares war on Germany. Woodrow Wilson, elected on an anti-war platform, does an about face. Thousands of Union members are jailed, harassed, lynched, forced to get on their knees and kiss the American flag, castrated or killed, by outstanding "patriots" for maintaining the original anti-war position which got Wilson elected President. In the name of "freedom" the government and vigilantes across the nation destroy printing presses, labor halls and Union offices, burn books and papers to stop the anti-war peace movement. -1917

Sunday, April 7:

6 day sit-down strike of workers at the Hershey Chocolate Corporation. The strike would end in violence, as dairy workers and loyal Hershey employees stormed the factory to force out strikers. Eventually, Hershey Corporation workers would sign an agreement with the AFL through the Bakery and Confectionary International Union, becoming one of the first American candy companies to Unionize. -1937
 15,000 Union janitors strike, Los Angeles. -2000

Monday, April 8:

President Wilson establishes the War Labor Board, composed of representatives from business and labor, to arbitrate disputes between workers and employers during World War I. -1918

 The Works Progress Administration (WPA) is approved by Congress. President Franklin Roosevelt proposed the WPA during the Great Depression of the 1930's when almost 25 percent of Americans were unemployed. It created low-paying federal jobs providing immediate relief, putting 8.5 million jobless to work on projects ranging from construction of bridges, highways and public buildings to arts programs like the Federal Writers' Project. -1935

Tuesday, April 9:

IWW organizes the 1,700-member crew of the Leviathan, then the world's largest vessel. -1930

Butte: A short bitter strike by Butte Miners Union No 1 starts today and turns ugly on the 14th when the Company sends salaried employees across picket lines to keep mines operating during strike. Mobs roam Butte neighborhoods destroying homes and property of Company "scabs." In Solidarity the Carpenter's Union refuses to allow it's members to repair any of the damage. -1946

Public school teachers strike in Minneapolis, violating court orders not to walk out. The members of the Minneapolis Federation of Teachers sought the right to collectively bargain. Local Union President, and English teacher Norm Moen said, "I remember the example of Thoreau... We are taking a courageous action against an oppressive and repressive law." With support from AFL-CIO the teachers reach a reasonable settlement, including amnesty for the strikers. A year later, the Minnesota Legislature passed the Public Employment Labor Relations Act (PELRA) strengthening collective bargaining rights for public employees. -1970

From Brexit to Breatimeacht: the impact of Brexit on the Irish language

The Butte-Silver Bow Public Archives will continue its Brown Bag Lunch series on Wednesday, April 10, with a presentation by Dr. Katie Ni Loingsigh. This talk focuses on the introduction and adoption of new words associated with Brexit into the Irish language. While Brexit is still a relatively new word, it is a highly topical subject and many Brexit-related words are now in common usage, e.g. no deal, hard/soft Brexit, Brexiteers, in both English and Irish. This presentation aims to provide an insight into the development of Brexit-related words in the Irish language and explore how they are used in print media.

Katie Ni Loingsigh is a native of county Cork and an Irish-language lecturer in St. Angela's College, Sligo, a college of the National University of Ireland, Galway. She attended the University of Montana as part of a study abroad program in 2008. She undertook her PhD research in Dublin City University which focused on the collection and classification of idioms in the Irish language. Her research interests include Irish-language literature, minority languages, phraseology, lexicography and the Gaelic Revival period.

The presentation will begin at noon and run about an hour at the Archives, 17 W. Quartz. Guests are encouraged to bring a sack lunch. Coffee and water will be provided.

Brown Bag Lunches are held the second and fourth Wednesdays of every month. Upcoming lectures will focus on topics of local interest. For more information, contact the Archives at 782-3280.
