Council cuts 2 new positions, adds 4 firefighters

By Robin Jordan

Butte-Silver Bow commissioners voted last week to eliminate two of five new employee positions from the county budget.

However, in a separate measure, they approved hiring four new firefighters, whose salaries and benefits will be partially funded by a federal grant.

Commissioners voted against creating a new construction supervisor position for county-performed projects with a salary of $72,000 and benefits of an additional $30,000. They also rejected hiring an accountant for the Parks Division and building manager. Both positions would have been funded with taxpayer dollars.

Commissioners approved hiring an arborist, hiring an accountant for the URA and RRA tax-increment-funding districts and paying retiring Planning Director Jon Sesso $45,000 per year from mining damage settlements to be the county's part-time Superfund coordinator. These three positions are not expected to cost taxpayers any additional money.

The council voted 8-3 to accept a $570,000 grant from the Federal Emergency Management Agency's Assistance to Firefighter's Grant Program to hire four additional firefighters for a 3-year period. The federal grant covers 75 percent of the firefighters' wages and benefits for the first two years of the grant and 35 percent of wages and benefits during the third year.

In order to receive the grant, Butte-Silver Bow will have to provide matching funds of $115,194 in year one, $148,873 in year two and $281,371 in year three for a total of $545,493 for the three years.

According to Fire Marshal Brian Doherty, hiring the additional firefighters would allow the department to save approximately $30,000 home.

Although changes are possible until a final budget is enacted, tentatively on Aug. 14, Butte-Silver Bow tax bills are expected to increase

Will the Cleveland Browns win the Super Bowl this year? Well, Butte-Silver Bow officials had better hope so. Last week, Butte-Silver Bow commissioners brought to our attention that the county laid $30,000 worth of sod directly on top of gravel outside our new baseball stadium at Copper Mountain Park. A bewildered Bill Anderson, the District 10 commissioner, had the lowly Browns on his mind when he surveyed the situation. “The Cleveland Browns have a better chance of winning the Super Bowl this year than this grass living into next year,” Anderson told The Montana Standard. Now, my friend Bill is no Ace Rothstein, but it does not take an expert gambling handicapper to tell you that the Browns winning the Super Bowl is pretty farfetched. Actually, it is darn near impossible considering the Browns won five or fewer games in eight of the last nine years. Cleveland once again posted the worst record in the National Football League last season. The Browns won one game and lost 15. Going worst to first in the NFL has been done before, so there is some hope for Public Works Director Dave Schultz, the man who should be sweating this sod situation the most. In 1998, the St. Louis Rams went 4-12. The next year, they went 13-3 and won the Super Bowl when former grocery store stock boy quarterback Kurt Warner rose to fairytale fame by winning the NFL MVP. No team has ever gone from 1-15 to Super Bowl champions in one season, though an optimist would point out that the 1992 Cowboys won the Super Bowl after going 1-15 three years earlier. A pessimist, however, would tell you that the Browns have no Herschel Walker to trade away and no sucker to trade with like the Cowboys had. The Browns spent their first pick of the April draft on Myles Garrett, a so-called can't-miss defensive end from Texas A&M. Cleveland, by the way, is a graveyard for can't-miss draft picks who missed badly. The Browns added Michigan Safety Jabrill Peppers and Miami tight end David Njoku in the first round. They also picked up Notre Dame quarterback DeShone Kizer in the second round. That is a pretty good draft haul, but none of those draft picks have any grocery store experience listed on their résumés. Vegas Insider has the Browns as a 250-1 longshot to win Super Bowl LII in Minneapolis. Those are long odds, but it could be worse for Schultz's magical sod. The New York Jets and San Francisco 49ers are 300-1 longshots. When bookies make such large bets – like the one Schultz made placed on the sod with our hard-working tax dollars – they hedge their bet. So it would not be a bad idea for the public works director with such a public goof hanging over his head to put $120 on the Browns to capture the Lombardi Trophy. That would pay $30,000 needed for another round of sodding. Actually, he should put down $180. If the sod dies, we'll have to pull it up, put down (by Schultz's estimate) $10,000 to $15,000 worth of soil, and then put another $30,000 in sod. Whatever happened to the days when you could get dirt-cheap dirt? Schultz told the paper that he is not a “sod expert,” as if we did not realize that when guys under his direction laid sod on gravel that appeared to have been packed down by a steamroller. Even though anybody with a garden would have told him to lay the sod on soil, Schultz defended the county by pointing out that sod on gravel at the Skyline Park took root. Sure, a Little Leaguer might get a hit once if he closes his eyes when he swings. That doesn't mean you send the rest of the team to the plate blindfolded. I did not get a look at the gravel at the Skyline Park before it was covered, but I saw what they put the sod on top of at Copper Mountain. The grass was put down as a last-minute touchup around Miners Field at 3 Legends Stadium before the Butte Muckers hosted the Southern District Tournament. I literally stood there mouth agape as I watch grass being placed down on what looked like a parking lot. So when I saw Anderson's comparison to the Browns winning the Super Bowl, frankly, I thought he was being overly optimistic. A friend of mine is the superintendent at a golf course in a fairly big city. I shared with him the story in the paper, and he called laying sod over gravel “one of the dumbest things I have seen.”

BUTTE SPORTS

Butte-Silver bow better bet on the Cleveland Browns

He quoted one of his favorite sayings of one of his formers bosses. “We don't have enough money to do it right, but we have enough to do it twice?” My friend added, “They should have just painted it (the gravel) green if that's what they were going to do.” Like Schultz, I am no expert when it comes to laying sod. Four years ago, I did a ton of work in my yard to get it ready for a sodding project. I did not put in a sprinkling system like I probably should have, and I apparently did not bring in enough good soil. It never occurred to me to pack down gravel. Plus, I have a grass-killing female dog, and the yard isn't all that big. So, half my grass didn't survive the winter. I tried fighting the decline of grass each year until I finally gave up on my dirt patch for good this year. Instead of more sod, I'm going to try some different type of landscaping. I might even get artificial grass to make my yard look good. The good news, though, is my mistakes with sod didn't cost me or other taxpayers $30,000. The pallet of sod, which covers 500 square feet, cost about $500. I can make that up with one $2 bet on the Browns.

The Butte-Silver Bow Public Archives is calling for public input on a new exhibit slated to open in late fall called 100 Butte Objects.

The permanent exhibit of 100 items will illustrate 150 years of Butte history. From the iconic head frames that punctuate our landscape, to a simple miner's candlestick, or a pair of leather boxing gloves and a bottle of beer from the original Butte Brewing Company, the Archives will showcase artifacts that best represent our city's history. The Butte Archives has identified numerous objects within its collection that illustrates our journey from mining camp to shining metropolis to the economic center of Southwest Montana. We are now seeking input from the public! We want to know what objects YOU would choose to tell our story. Think outside the box, or Pit if you will, keeping in mind that these objects should speak directly to the development of Butte. Butte is nationally significant for its role in the electrification of America using the copper that was mined here. Woven throughout its mining history is Butte's connection to labor history, immigrant and ethnic history, and the many inventions and innovations developed here. Butte's history goes beyond mining, however. We can name significant people with Butte connections, like poet Berton Braley and artist Elizabeth Lochrie; or events like the Great Explosion of 1895. In the areas of sports and entertainment, Butte became significant on the vaudeville circuit, and played host to boxing matches and baseball games. Send us your list of objects, or if you have an outstanding object you would like to loan to the exhibit, please contact Kim Kohn at the Butte Archives at 406-782-3280, or email her at bsbarchives@bsb.mt.gov with the subject line “100 Objects.” The Archives is open 9 – 5, Monday through Friday, and closed on Monday, September 4 to observe Labor Day. We will accept input from the public until Wednesday, September 6. Football program from 1949 Cat-Griz game at newly-named Naranche stadium. The Brawl of the Wild was played in Butte from 1926-1950, first at Clark's Park, later at Butte High School from 1939-1950 (except 1942-1945).

Augustus Heinze and published as a weekly newspaper in Butte from 1898 until 1909. Heinze used the newspaper “to influence public opinion, appeal for political support and promote his industrial career.” Franklin School Beanie, 1948. This beanie belonged to Jennie Eva and was signed by the members of the graduating 8th grade class of 1948. Although Butte's population had waned to 55,000 after WWII, there were still 17 public grade schools in Butte. The Franklin School was in McQueen.

Ballpark sod story has tongues wagging

By Robin Jordan

Unless you've been on vacation or holed up hiding from the smoke, someone must have told you about the latest flap in Butte-Silver Bow over the sod laid at the new ballpark at Copper Mountain Sports Complex.

Apparently, officials in the Public Works and Parks Departments made a decision to lay $30,000-worth of sod over a mix of sand and gravel at the park rather than to pay another $10,000 to put down a layer of topsoil beneath the sod. Now, sources say, despite copious watering, the sod is not taking root and can be rolled up like a rug on a driveway.

That's no surprise to anyone in Butte who has tried to lay sod or tried to grow grass from seed. The natural soil in a lot of Butte yards is really nothing more than decomposed granite. Most homeowners, at least those who want to grow grass or other plants, bushes and trees, have had to dig up at least a few inches of the stuff and bring in topsoil and add organic improvements to get anything other than a few noxious weeds to grow in their yards.

Almost everyone we've talked to this week has said laying sod on sand and gravel was a dumb idea and has wondered how long it will be before the county has to go to the taxpayers for more money to have the job redone properly.

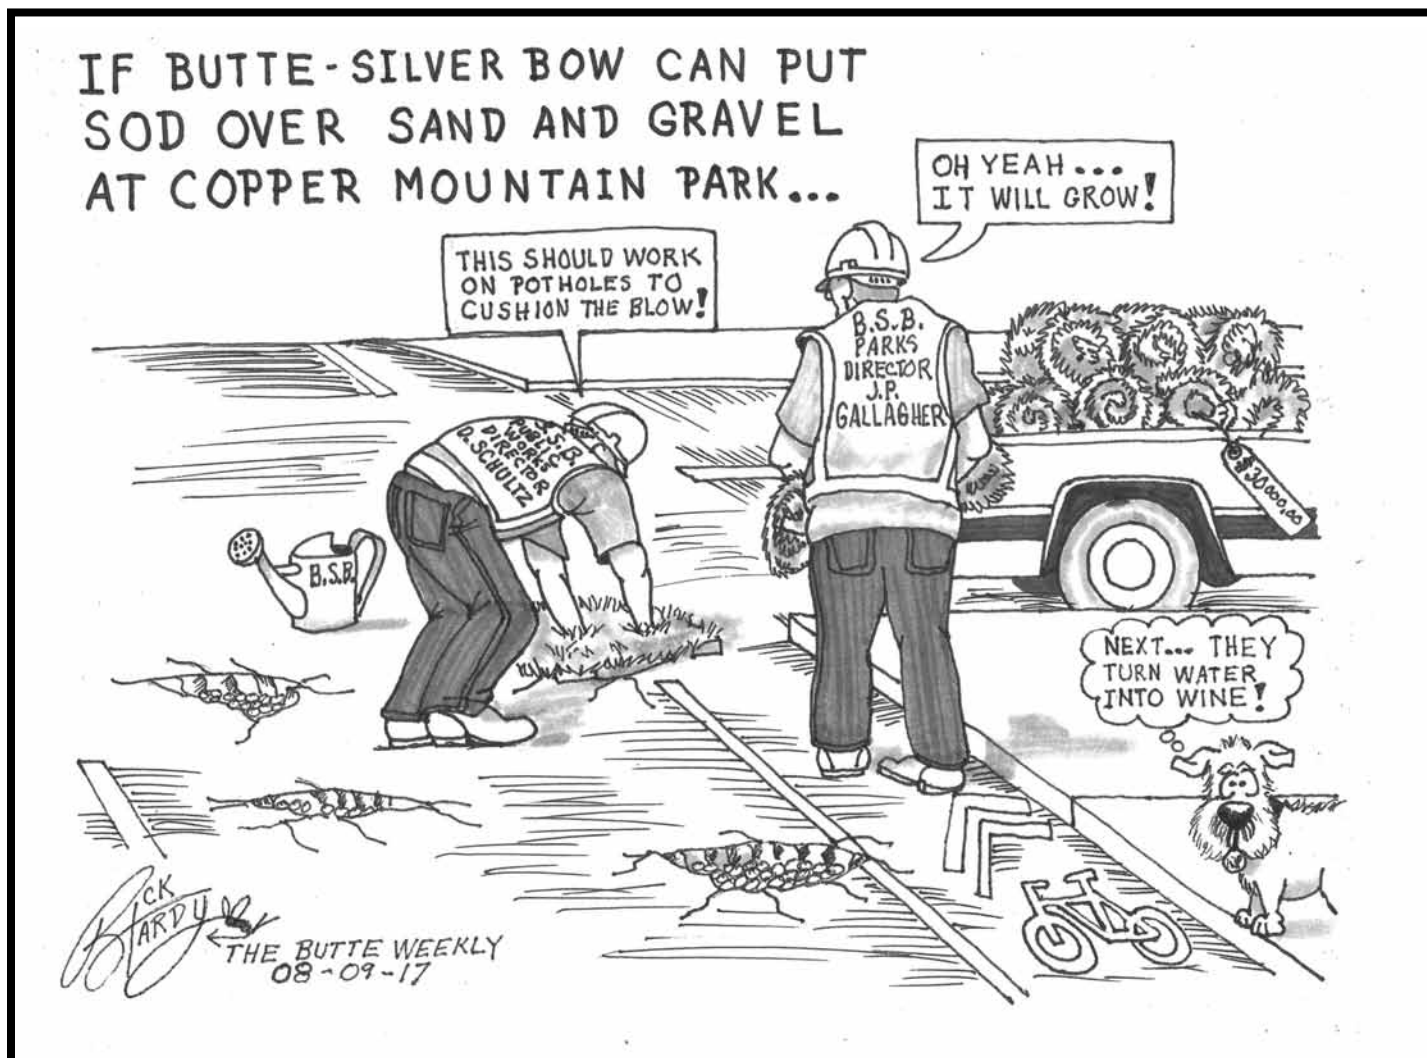

The part of the story that strikes us as strange is that department officials were told by two professional firms, the landscaping firm that provided the sod and Pioneer Technical Services, that they needed to put down topsoil so that the grass could put down roots—and they made a decision to go cheap on the job and use the sand/gravel mix instead.

According to the local daily newspaper, one official said the county had laid sod over sand and gravel at Skyline Park and it had worked, so he thought it would work just fine at the new ballpark.

Other sources say soil from MSE was brought in and put down before the sod was laid at Skyline Park, which sounds likely.

This isn't the first sod-laying project in Butte-Silver Bow. Just a few years ago, the county put down a whole field of sod at the Original Mine Yard that is now a beautiful, healthy swath of grass. Someone in Butte-Silver Bow must have the institutional knowledge of how that project was accomplished.

Even if the county had not had the opinions of two professional firms, officials could have asked for advice from the citizens who serve on the county's Urban Forestry Board. Those folks have years of experience what will and won't grow and how to plant it.

Why couldn't the county have used some of the fill dirt it brings in to replace yards polluted by past mining operations? One has to wonder.

Maybe now that commissioners have approved hiring a new county arborist we'll have someone in the government who can tell the powers that be how to grow grass.

That is, if the arborist can get the officials in charge to listen.

Republicans Present a Koch Brothers' Budget

By George Waring

Any of you remember Herbert Hoover? It's fairly rare to see his presidency being compared with that of Donald Trump. Most Republicans would like to forget that Hoover's misfortune was to be president at the start of the Great Depression. However, the Republicans controlling the House Budget Committee seem to have adopted the Hoover years as their historical target. Perhaps, they have a premonition concerning the expected economic collapse.

The analysis done of the House Budget Committee's proposed budget for next year by the Center on Budget and Public Policy's Richard Kogan ends on a cautionary note: "Slashing Non-Defense Discretionary Programs to levels as a percent of the economy not seen since the Hoover administration is no way to address today's challenges. Policymakers should invest in the country's future, not turn the clock back."

Which programs did the Republican dominated Budget Committee approve to cut deeply in order to attain the low level of federal government spending last seen in the late 1920s? Their names should be familiar. Medical, scientific, and agricultural research. K-12 education and Head Start. Job training. National Parks. (Yes, Glacier and Yellowstone.) The Weather Service. Mass transit, highways, and airports. And, of course, Scott Pruitt's hated Environmental Protection Agency. And Dr. Ben Carson's bailiwick, HUD, which spends money on low-income housing assistance.

Then came recommended reductions in Veterans' medical care. Do you recall that on the campaign trail, Trump repeatedly stated how much he loved military veterans. After all, they were the ones who had defended him during the beginning of his real estate career. Trump had five deferments during his college years, from 1964 to 1968. And then a medical deferment in 1968, that crucial year of the Vietnam War buildup. That last one, Trump told the New York Times, was because of bone spurs in his heels. He said, "I had a doctor that gave me a letter — a very strong letter on the heels."

Also, the House Budget Committee took on the administrative costs associated with our largest social programs: Social Security, Medicare, and Unemployment compensation. The costs of those entitlement programs themselves are determined through underlying laws, not annual appropriations, and those laws generally continue from year to year unless policymakers decide to change them. And it looks like the Republicans in the House will be changing them.

A few examples of the levels of funding set by the House Republicans. Funding for core job training grants is being cut by one-fifth, putting it below what it was back in 2010. And this news was released during "Made in America" week at the White House. Will government financed training in job skills be needed if the U.S. starts manufacturing stuff again?

The Republican Party claims it honors family values. Its "Right to Life" defenders claim to be on the side of parents raising children. Yes, the members of the Koch Brothers funded House Freedom Caucus left some money in the federal child care assistance program, but only enough to help out one of six eligible children. The low-income rental assistance program will be there, but only for 25% of eligible households. Is there a deep, and punishing racism to be found here?

It looks like the Republican House Budget was tailored to meet the wishes of the Koch Brothers. In late June, The Hill reported that the Budget Committee's final report was delayed due to unmet demands of the Koch Brothers' funded "Freedom Caucus." That Koch group announced it wouldn't support the Republican budget resolution "unless deeper cuts were made to mandatory spending, largely in welfare programs such as the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP), commonly known as food stamps."

The Committee agreed to reductions in domestic spending of $150 billion over a decade. However, the Freedom Caucus demanded another $200 billion in cuts in domestic programs within ten years. The Freedom Caucus Chairman, Mark Meadows, said that he had located more cuts in domestic spending totaling $295 billion.

Republicans voted to increase Pentagon spending beyond Trump's demand. They approved $621.5 billion for the Pentagon and $87 billion to fight terror. Last year, it was $551 billion for the Pentagon plus $74 billion against terror. Last year, they approved $519 billion for domestic needs. This year, just $511 billion.

The Budget Committee approved domestic cuts of $203 billion in ten years. The Koch-funded House "Freedom Caucus" demands double that in domestic cuts or it will oppose the budget resolution in the full House.

Healthy Lifestyle Classes

Now that we have spent more than seven months talking about Healthier Living, we have a better idea of what it takes to make lifestyle changes, as well as how difficult those changes can be. It is time to recruit for another session of our Healthy Lifestyle Classes. I'm sure you have noticed that my columns alternate focusing on healthy eating, exercise and managing stress. Not surprisingly, our classes have the same focus. The bonus is that the format and materials used in the classes are evidence based.

This means that all the different classes that have been held around the country since the 90's have kept track of the results of those attending classes, and they work! Participants have consistently lost between five and seven percent of their body weight. It doesn't seem like a lot of weight, but it is proven to be the amount it takes to improve health and help prevent diseases, like Diabetes.

In addition, participants have consistently worked up to exercising 150 minutes per week. Again, this is the minimum recommended amount of exercise and has been shown to improve health and prevent disease. The lessons on managing stress have also been proven effective. We are very lucky to have a Licensed Clinical Social Worker to present these classes, and she is amazing!

Ida Reighard, RN and Diabetes Educator at the hospital, and I lead these classes and they start two times each year. We are currently preparing for a new session. We meet for sixteen weeks once each week and then monthly for eight months. We encourage participants to write down everything they eat and drink and record minutes of activity for each day. Weight is monitored at each meeting and food and exercise logs are turned in. We also have expert speakers. The counselor mentioned above comes to talk about stress management and Dietitians from the hospital come to educate the classes on dietary guidelines.

Focusing on what they eat and making healthy changes in their diet are popular aspects of the class for many past participants and most soon develop healthier food routines. Class support and camaraderie are also among the favorite features of the class when asked. At each meeting, the class participants share their victories and offer encouragement to anyone struggling to get good results.

Outcomes experienced by people taking the class are sometimes mixed, but the participants who come to classes regularly, and actively participate, benefit the most. For the one hour per week commitment, the payback can be huge. In addition to losing weight, some people reduce or eliminate medications, many reduce their numbers, like cholesterol, blood pressure and blood sugar, and most exercise regularly by the end of the program.

One class meets on Mondays at the Southwest Montana Community Health Center. A second class is scheduled in an evening at St. James Healthcare with the day determined by what works best for the interested participants.

To enroll in a class, schedule a meeting for an assessment with either Ida at St. James Healthcare, 723-2960 or me at SW MT Community Health Center, 723-4075, ext. 415.

Diabetes Tidbit

People often times feel what they ate at dinner or bedtime has a direct impact on their blood sugar in the morning. This is not true. The fasting morning BG is controlled mostly by the overnight insulin level. You are probably not making enough insulin at night. This causes sugar to be released by the liver. The "Leaky Liver" puts more sugar in your blood and raises your blood sugar. This is frustrating because you may go to bed with a normal blood sugar, (80-140) and wake up higher and you did not eat all night. Please remember, there is more to diabetes than food.

Carousel Corner

By Larry Hoffman

The sheetrock taping crew made some good progress last week. It's a good-sized building so there is a lot yet to be done.

Randy Clayton and I were the only ones who showed up to work on the mechanism Wednesday afternoon. I had a bum shoulder, so wasn't much help. We did get a little cleanup done for the drywall crew.

On Saturday we had Randy, Jim Ayres, Ed Curren, Dave Evankovich, and me hanging sheetrock, consolidating material, and cleaning up. Several visitors stopped by to get a look at progress.

We will be working on the mechanism Wednesday afternoons starting at 4:00, with general work sessions at 9:00 AM on Saturdays and 4:00 PM Mondays. We could use someone (or several someones) with the time to clean small parts with a cabinet sandblaster in Larry Schnell's shop, almost any day or evening.

If someone has the experience, we would be glad to pay for doing some touch-up work on our steel roof and some changes to the cupola to keep rain from blowing in. None of us are young enough to do it.

The Heather Lingle concert at the Silver Dollar last Thursday night brought about $500 to our project. She and Monty Montgomery were great, as were the Del Montes! We would love to have them come and play in the completed Carousel building before too long.

I still get the question all the time, "When will the Carousel be ready?" There is no answer to that, except "Not today." Once the drywall work is finished, things should fall into place fairly quickly, with lots of opportunities for almost anyone to help with the last details. They say the devil is in the details and at this point we would welcome even his help!

This project has been in the works for more than 20 years now, with a lot of good people working on it and donating for the many expenses. The Stodden Park site turned out to be an especially good location, with the new aquatic facility next door and all the added attractions of the Stodden Park Improvement project surrounding both site.

It won't be the Columbia Gardens of our memories and legend, but it will be a shining Butte attraction worth waiting for.

Visitor praises Butte Archives staff
I recently spent an over-the-top-great few days in Butte, trekking where my ancestors lived. Can't say enough for the public Archives Dept. on Quartz Street.
In this automated day in age where it's often hard to get help that's not a robot, the Archives staff were unexpectedly welcoming and helpful, and their resources are a treasure. Butte is such a find, walking the streets I was able to sense what life was like for my great grandparents, e.g. walking from Mountain View Methodist Church to West Woolman St. where one great grandmother lived (and whose all three husbands died in the mines). Such a great town and experience.

slightly this year for a number of reasons.
This year's budget includes a 1.5 percent cost-of-living wage increase for all employees as well as an additional payment of $30 per month for those in the county's self-funded health plan. Health insurance premiums for those employees are going up an average of $170 per month.
Taxpayers will also see an increase this year in tax bills for operations and maintenance for the new pool. Voters approved a bond issue in 2016 for pool construction and up to $350,000 per year for operations and maintenance costs. Tax bills increased last fall for construction, approximately $11.60 for a $100,000 home. Operations and maintenance costs that will kick in when the pool is completed next May will add approximately $5.40 to the tax bill this year for a $100,000 home.

A major reason taxes will increase this year is that the county will not be taking a large chunk of money from its Tax Increment Financing Industrial District (TIFID) to balance the budget. Former Chief Executive Matt Vincent did that in 3 out of the 4 years he held office, taking $1.3 million for last year's budget, which expired June 30.
As the budget now stands, the owner of a home worth $75,000 would pay $13.92 more in property taxes this year, the owner of $100,000 home would pay $18.56 more and the owner of a $200,000 home would pay $37.13 more, according to the county's Finance and Budget Department.

Savory Summer Salad
By Debbie Sorensen

Recently I had the opportunity to work on a project with some new friends in the Denver area. While there, one of the lunches that we shared was similar to the recipe I've put together here. Served up in their inviting kitchen, this simple but delicious salad put an exclamation point on the morning for me. It was filling and satisfying with the touch of sweet rounding out the meal.
According to the hostess, the mayonnaise made from the avocado oil, is the critical ingredient for the zesty flavor of the offering. We are fortunate to have some stores in our area that have some specialty selections.

Savory Summer Salad

- 1 head Romaine lettuce, washed, dried, broken
- 1 c. strawberries, washed & sliced
- 1 c. fresh pineapple chunks, well drained
- 2 c. tuna, in chunks
- 1/2 c. fresh Parmesan cheese

Mayonnaise made from Avocado oil (enough to lightly dress the salad)
Gluten free crackers, crushed (or Chinese Noodles) over top of individual salads
Prepare the Romaine, fruit and tuna. Toss together with the desired amount of mayonnaise. Allow individuals to serve themselves and top their salads with the crunchy topping of choice and add Parmesan cheese to their liking. Serves: 6-8

Secretary of the Interior Zinke no Teddy Roosevelt

By Paul Vang

Many in the so-called conservation community were willing to give Ryan Zinke, our former representative in Congress, some cautious approval when the president nominated him to be Secretary of Interior.

Some were dismayed because Zinke is a hunter, for Pete's sake. That gave others reason to be encouraged that being a hunter, and from Montana, no less, that at least he might not be totally clueless when it comes to public land and environmental issues.

At the time of his confirmation hearings, Zinke declared himself as a Teddy Roosevelt-type Republican and a protector of public lands, pointing out that he passed on being a delegate to the Republican national convention because the party platform called for transfer of public lands to the states. Since his appointment, and riding to work on a horse his first day on the job at Interior, Zinke has demonstrated that he may be The Donald's errand boy, but he's no friend of the environment or our public lands.

During Zinke's short tenure as Montana's lone congressman, he took, according to Ted Williams, writing in Hatch, the online fly-fishing magazine, $300,000 in donations from the oil and gas industry and earned an environmental voting record, as compiled by the League of Conservation voters, of 4 percent. Now, as reported by the Denver Post, he's trying to turn the Interior's lands into "profit centers" for the government by accelerating oil and coal development.

As for being a T.R. Republican, we might look at Zinke's actions regarding national monuments. Following the president's directive to review the status of national monuments created in the last 20 years, Zinke did announce that he'd recommend that the Missouri Breaks National Monument remain unchanged.

On the other hand, Zinke made a tour of the Bears Ear National Monument in Utah and spent a full day listening to local opponents of the monument, while giving a scant hour of time to the Native American tribes that had been working many years for monument status because of the many antiquities in the area, as well as the unique landscape.

More recently, Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg made a visit to Glacier National Park to tour the melting ice fields. Before the visit took place, Interior and National Park Service officials sent a directive that the Park's top research ecologist and the Park superintendent would not participate in Zuckerberg's tour.

In the last few weeks, some Interior climate scientists have been reassigned to relatively meaningless assignments. An example is Joel Clement, Interior's top climate policy official, who was reassigned to an Interior agency that tracks royalty payments.

On July 20, Zinke was a speaker at a closed-door meeting of the American Legislative Exchange Council (ALEC), an industry organization backed by the Koch Industries and ExxonMobil that advocates for conservative causes. Speeches by some other attendees, such as Newt Gingrich and Education Secretary Betsy DeVos were recorded, Zinke's speech was, according to High Country News, not recorded, nor were any transcripts released.

Zinke's eagerness to run errands for his boss blew up in his face a couple weeks ago when he called Alaska's Republican senators Lisa Murkowski and Dan Sullivan to threaten retribution if they didn't toe the line on the administration's healthcare bill, including, according to the Washington Post, blocking energy exploration and plans to allow the construction of new roads. Or, as one observer noted, he threatened to, of all things, protect the environment.

Sen. Murkowski, as we know, still voted against the "skinny repeal" bill, not worried about Zinke's threats.

In the Post's daily news summary, The Daily 202, the Post commented, "This demonstrated the degree to which Zinke's ham-handed phone call was political malpractice...Only an amateur would threaten the person who has oversight over his agency! If she wants, Murkowski can make Zinke's life so unbelievably miserable. He has no idea."

Note: last week, Zinke told the Associated Press that the idea that he threatened Murkowski is "laughable."

Zinke might be from Montana, but he's no Teddy Roosevelt. As head of Interior, his first priority should be to keep public lands intact, healthy, and not a profit center.
