Greeley residents call for action, citing health effects of dust from MR's operations

By Robin Jordan

Residents of the Greeley neighborhood concerned about the possible health effects of heavy metals in dust from nearby Montana Resources mining operations held a presentation before Butte-Silver Bow commissioners last week.

Ed Banderob, President of the Greeley Neighborhood Community Development Corporation, told commissioners the Greeley neighborhood is the only one in Butte impacted daily by past, present and future mining activity. Therefore, the residents want the council of commissioners to support their request for the EPA and the Montana DEQ to designate the neighborhood as a special hybrid Superfund operable unit.

The council previously referred the request to the Superfund Advisory and Redevelopment Trust Authority for its recommendation.

Residents' concerns have been raised in recent months by new studies that indicate chronic, low-level exposure to heavy metals, which are present in the dust, may be harmful to their health.

Banderob said, as he has in the past, that the group is not trying to shut down MR's operations. He said the group recognizes the current importance of mining to the community as well as the mining industry's contributions in the past.

To a county worker who heckled him at a previous meeting, Banderob said, "We're not your enemy."

"We're only trying to get (MR) and the local government to do something about the situation and protect themselves and your jobs before some East Coast, out-of-town environmentalists come to town and sue us out of existence," he said.

"We believe the dust can no longer be considered a nuisance," he said. "It must now be considered a health hazard."

Banderob introduced Professor Katie Hailer of Montana Tech, who presented the findings of her study, "Assessing Human Metal Accumulations in an Urban Superfund Site," published in 2017.

In the study, Hailer tested hair and blood samples from volunteers in Butte and Bozeman as well as conducting air-sampling using three monitors in three locations from May to October of 2015. The Bozeman volunteers, who had never lived in Butte were used as a control group. All volunteers also participated in a lifestyle survey. More women than men participated and the Butte volunteers were older, heavier and more smoked than in the Bozeman group.

residents and 86 Bozeman residents. Hailer said elevated levels of aluminum, arsenic, cadmium, copper, molybdenum, manganese and uranium were found in the Butte samples.

In blood samples were collected from 81 Butte residents and 72 Bozeman residents, arsenic levels were statistically higher in the Butte group, Hailer said.

While heavy metal levels in blood indicate recent exposure, she said, levels in hair indicate more long-term exposure.

The air-monitoring research found levels of arsenic and manganese above ambient air quality standards. Lead, zinc, copper, molybdenum and strontium were also found in the larger particulate collected. Hailer said the concentration of metals found in the samples decreased

Annual Thompson Food Drive

The Butte Emergency Food Bank will hold their annual Thompson Food Drive on December 1, 2018.

Our shelves are looking very low, and we are in need of the food provided during this drive. We are looking for any nonperishable food items. Canned meats, pasta, mac and cheese, canned fruit and canned vegetables are always needed.

Our community is struggling this year and there are a lot of individuals without work and depending on the food bank for assistance. We really appreciate all of the support we receive from this great community.

Our mission is to ensure that no one individuals has to feel the pain and fear of going hungry. With your help we will be able to continue supplying needed food to our clients.

We will have individuals out to pick food beginning at 9:00 a.m. Saturday morning, Dec. 1. Please place food on your front porch. Your help is really appreciated and needed. If you would like to make a monetary donation, just place it in an envelope marked donation and we will ensure that it is processed.

Happy Thanksgiving to everyone.

Sadly, we now live in a time when reporters are afraid to ask tough questions because they might lose their press credentials.

Too many reporters skate around the tough questions for fear they will be singled out and sent to their rooms. If you don't report how the institution likes, then you might not get to report at all.

No, this is not about CNN's Jim Acosta and the White House. It is about college and pro sports. It's about the NFL. It's about the Chicago Bears.

While it might not be a huge deal, an incident with the Bears last week highlighted the way the gutless media can be pushed around.

The Bears put their foot down on a pair of television stations to demand that they stop showing footage of kicker Cody Parkey practicing at Soldier Field.

Parkey was coming off a dreadful game. He missed two extra points

BUTTE SPORTS

Shirley Povich showed us how it should be done and two short field goals — all four of them clinking off an upright of the goalpost — in a home game against Detroit.

The media made kind of a big deal about Parkey never actually practicing at the team's home stadium, which is about 40 miles through heavy traffic away from the Bears' training facility.

Whether it was their own move or a response to some bad publicity, the Bears finally sent Parkey, who signed a lucrative free agent contract to join the Bears in the offseason, down to Soldier Field to get in some kicks.

That was big news in Chicago, where the Bears are once again relevant after a long period of hibernation. Because it was such a big story, two television stations sent helicopters above Soldier Field to capture a quick video of Parkey practicing along with his holder and long snapper.

It wasn't a hard-hitting piece. It was just a fun, little story that had the city and its fanbase buzzing.

Bears legend Jim McMahon even saw the news, and he tweeted a photo of how he handled a helicopter flying over the team practice when he was getting ready for Super Bowl XX. Yes, McMahon mooned the helicopter.

The Bears, though, didn't like the great publicity. They ordered the television stations to immediately take the video down from their social media sites and to never show it on television again.

The flyovers, the Bears said, violated the team's media practice policy.

Instead of flipping the Bears the proverbial bird, the stations did exactly what the Bears said. The stations didn't want their reporters to face losing their press credentials.

The stations bowed to the team like it had real power over what they could show. The White House would not even be that bold.

While being told of the situation during an appearance on the Waddle and Silvy radio show on ESPN Chicago, national writer/television personality Michael Wilbon reacted the way every good journalist should have. He was pissed.

"You're not part of the team," Wilbon said of the television stations. "You're not there to be approved by the team."

Then, Wilbon told Tom Waddle and Mark Silverman about the great Shirley Povich. In addition to being the father of Maury Povich, Shirley Povich was a legendary sportswriter and columnist for the Washington Post, the paper that published the Pentagon Papers.

He wrote right up until his death at the age of 92 in 1998.

Povich butted heads with the Washington Redskins owner and founder George Preston Marshall over the team's all-white roster.

In one of Povich's stories, he delivered what was quite possibly the best line ever written by a sportswriter.

"Jim Brown, born ineligible to play for the Redskins, integrated their end zone three times yesterday."

If that's not the best, then maybe this one is:

"The Redskins colors are burgundy, gold and Caucasian."

Marshall sued Povich, and lost. He also pulled his press credentials at least once.

"He was kicked out. He was told his credential was revoked by the Redskins," Wilbon said of Povich. "And the greatest is to go to the library and the vault and see Shirley Povich's columns when he was banned saying, 'from the way it looked on Channel 9.'"

When the Redskins took away his access, Povich basically said, "If you didn't like my writing with credentials, then you really won't like how I write without credentials."

That is the same message every reporter should send in response to any threats from a professional, college or high school team. Or any organization.

Reporters and columnists like Povich are, sadly, very few and far between.

Too many of today's sportswriters are afraid to go out of bounds.

Remember former Associated Press writer Steven Wilstein? He is the guy who was shunned by his baseball writing colleagues for pointing out that slugger Mark McGwire was had a bottle of Androstenedione in his locker during his home run chase with Sammy Sosa in 1998.

"Andro" was not illegal in baseball at the time. It was in the NFL, Olympics and NCAA, though, and for good reason.

Other writers called for Wilstein's credentials to be stripped, then they pulled the shade back down over their own eyes as guys like McGwire, Sosa and many other cheaters tarnished our national pastime on their watch.

Instead of following Wilstein's lead, his colleagues basically yelled, "Hey, shut up. Now, Mr. McGwire, please tell us more about your natural ability to hit a baseball more than 900 feet."

Had more reporters not been afraid to ask real questions, maybe the Steroid Era of baseball wouldn't have lasted so long. Maybe it wouldn't still be going on.

If reporters weren't afraid to ask questions that anger the franchise, maybe someone would have asked Ray Lewis exactly how two men ended up dead when they got into a fight with him and his posse outside that Atlanta nightclub in January 2000.

Instead, too many accepted his guilty plea to obstruction of justice in a double murder like it was a parking ticket. They they helped glorify the linebacker all the way to Canton.

If reporters weren't afraid to lose the press pass, maybe we would have a writer ask a Dallas Cowboys lineman what it's like to block for Ezekiel Elliott when he knows the running back beat up a woman.

If they threaten to throw you out for a question like that, who cares? Reporters are supposed to ask tough questions — at the White House and at the stadiums.

When one reporter is thrown out, the next one is supposed to stand up and follow the same line of questioning.

Without tough questions, people get away with bad things, whether that is a horrible trade, domestic violence or overt racism.

Without the persistence of Povich, perhaps the Redskins would have waited even later than 1962 to become the last professional football team to integrate. Maybe the first black player doesn't arrive in Washington until 1972.

Yet, here we are more than half a century after Povich showed us all how to stand up to the man, and we have TV stations and reporters kowtowing to a team over a quick, innocent video of a practice field goal.

If they will fall for the little things, they have no chance when it comes to the big things.

If you're a journalist and that doesn't enrage you, there is something wrong.

You need to look yourself in the mirror and ask, "What would Shirley Povich do?"

Share Your Financial Abundance with Your Family

Thanksgiving is almost here. Ideally, this holiday should be about more than turkey, football, Black Friday and Cyber Monday. After all, the idea behind Thanksgiving is to share what we have with our loved ones. But if you want your family to take part in your abundance, you will want to look beyond one day in November. To help ensure you leave the type of legacy you desire, you will need to follow a detailed plan of action, including these steps:

Review your estate plans. If you haven't done so already, take this opportunity to review your plans for managing your estate – and if you haven't yet drawn them up, it's never too soon to start. You may want to work with a legal professional to create a will, living trust and other documents essential to your plan.

Preserve your financial independence. If your financial independence were to be jeopardized, your adult children might be forced to use their own resources to help support you – an outcome you obviously would never want. How can you protect yourself and your financial assets? For one thing, it's a good idea to work with your legal professional to create a power of attorney, which would enable someone – possibly a grown child – to make financial decisions for you, should you become incapacitated. Also, you may want to guard yourself against the devastating costs of long-term care, such as an extended nursing home stay. Consider this: The average annual cost for a private room in a nursing home is more than $97,000, according to a survey by the insurance company Genworth. Furthermore, Medicare typically pays very little for these expenses. Consequently, you may want to consider protecting yourself in advance by purchasing long-term care insurance or permanent life insurance with a long-term care provision. A financial professional can help you evaluate your options and recommend which ones might be appropriate for your needs.

Share your wishes with your family. It can take some time to put your plans in place – and, even then, you may need to make changes periodically, based on altered circumstances in your life, such as changes in your marital status, new family members, new property, etc. In any case, as your estate- and legacy-based plans evolve, you'll want to communicate them to your family – because, by doing so, you can help spare them some potentially unpleasant surprises when it's time to settle your estate. Also, by making your wishes known to your family far ahead of when any action needs to be taken, you'll help prepare the right people for the roles you wish them to assume – power of attorney, executor of your estate, and so on. You'll also want to acquaint your family with the legal, tax and financial professionals you've selected to work on your estate and legacy plans. By introducing these professionals early on, you can provide your family members with a greater degree of confidence in the overall estate-planning process.

Thanksgiving goes by in a blur. But by taking the steps described above, along with others, you can demonstrate the spirit of sharing with your family for years – and possibly generations – to come.

This article was written by Edward Jones for use by your local Edward Jones Financial Advisor.

Let's take time to be grateful

By Robin Jordan

Thursday is Thanksgiving, the one holiday when rather than celebrating with presents, fireworks or parades, we are asked to reflect within ourselves and share our gratitude with those around us.

For those of us who are not farmers, it may be hard to connect the holiday with its roots in pilgrim times to a celebration of the harvest, a time to give thanks for the bounty of the fields and forests. Even if we don't farm, garden or hunt, though, most of us will gather with family or friends to eat Thanksgiving dinner. Hopefully, we'll also take the opportunity to reflect on the blessings of the past year and share our thankfulness.

I'm grateful for my small family, which includes my Mom, who celebrated her 98th birthday this year, my wonderful husband, two dogs and three cats. We're lucky to share lots of time together, whether it's simply cooking and eating a family meal, running errands or working on a family project. The animals bring us joy every day with their antics. The dogs give us a reason to get out into the woods to enjoy a break in nature and to play. The cats have their playful moments, too, but their greatest contribution is snuggling up for some quiet time together.

I'm grateful for the place where we live. Butte is still the friendliest city in the world and offers lots of opportunity to meet great people and make great friends. Our friends are a blessing, whether we're sharing our triumphs or our sorrows.

Butte, with its colorful history, is a beautiful town, set in the heart of the mountains. Whatever the weather, it's a photographer's dream, from its historic Uptown District to the rough beauty of the mine yards on the hill. We have many great festivals and celebrations to enjoy throughout the year and if we want to get away, explore nature and get some exercise, we have a great trail system and there are many destinations just minutes from town where we can walk in the woods, sit by a lake or have a picnic.

While our lives are fortunate, we should take time this Thanksgiving to think about those in our community who need help: those who are homeless or hungry. Before we get too deep into the Christmas shopping rush, it's a good time to think about what we can do to help our less fortunate neighbors.

We know there are many worthy causes, but we'd like to encourage you to help out one of our favorites, the Butte Emergency Food Bank. The Food Bank distributed more than 1.3 million pounds of food in 2018. It feeds about 2,900 people each month through two community meals each week at the Knights of Columbus Hall, the backpack program in the elementary and high schools, and through individual home deliveries. The Food Bank serves more than 700 households per month, which includes approximately 450 children in those homes. The Food Bank is also involved in helping to ensure that the homeless community has food available on weekends.

Saturday, Dec. 1 is the 30th annual Thompson Food Drive. The Food Bank really needs your help at this time of year and relies heavily on this drive to keep the larder stocked during the long winter months. Residents can leave bags of non-perishable food items or monetary donations on their front porches or near the front door and volunteers will be collecting them that morning. For more information, or to volunteer to help with the drive, please contact the Food Bank at 1010 E. Second Street or call 782-6230.

Reflections on the Midterm Elections

By George Waring

Jennifer Rubin, conservative opinion writer for the Washington Post, counseled Republican Party incumbents to study what happened in Arizona. A state that had not elected a Democrat since 1988 just rejected a Republican congresswoman trying to become Senator. Although exit polls showed white voters remained Trump loyalists at 56% to 44%, 53% of white college graduates and 55% of white college educated women voted Democratic. And voters age 18 to 44 gave 59% of their votes to the Democrat. Fully 77% of voters who ranked health care as their top concern chose the Democrat.

Rubin opined, "The GOP looks more like a party in decline. Republicans outside the Deep South should be concerned about their survival so long as Trump is president."

Max Boot, foreign policy adviser to John McCain in the 2008 campaign, and a national security analyst at the Council on Foreign Relations, had been advising traditional Republicans to vote for every Democrat running for the House this year. Just a year ago, Boot published an article in Foreign Affairs describing how the first year of the Trump Presidency had caused him to go public regarding what his conservatism had covered up.

"In the last few years, in particular, it has become impossible for me to deny the reality of discrimination, harassment, even violence that people of color and women continue to experience in modern-day America from a power structure that remains for the most part in the hands of straight, white males. People like me, in other words. Whether I realize it or not, I have benefitted from my skin color and my gender—and those of a different gender or sexuality or skin color have suffered because of it."

In Mid-November, Boot contributed to the Washington Post his opinion piece: "Trump may be a disaster at home. But he's even worse overseas."

Boot noted that it was Woodrow Wilson in Paris in 1918 who established the traditional role of our President at international conferences. And it was Donald Trump who publicly abandoned all international responsibility 100 years later. "No president has been worse at this diplomatic function than Donald Trump," wrote Boot. "He is most comfortable in rallies before throngs of adoring acolytes. When he goes overseas, he is sycophantic with dictators and painfully ill at ease among democratic leaders, because his protectionist and isolationist views are so out of line with theirs, and he is utterly incapable of defending himself with reasoned discourse."

As Boot judged, we have been left with a national leader who "makes boastful speeches, sulks and pouts if his ego is not massaged, and then retreats to the safety of his hotel room or airplane to zing his peers via Twitter." In Paris, it was French President Macron who assumed leadership of NATO and western democracies. In Boot's words, "Macron rebuked Trump to his face, warning in a speech of the dangers of the nationalist doctrine that Trump has embraced."

Macron said, "By putting our own interests first, with no regard for others, we erase the very thing that a nation holds dearest, and the thing that keeps it alive: its moral values."

For his part, Trump canceled a Saturday visit to an American war cemetery because of a little light rain. The French army actually tweeted a picture of a soldier training under the caption "There is rain but it does not matter."

Boot wrote, "The isolation of the president was complete when he skipped a march by world leaders down the Champs-Élysées and flew home before the start of the Paris Peace Forum. Once again, 'America First' has become 'America Alone.'"

Michael Gerson, the Washington Post's Christian Evangelical opinion columnist, a speech writer for George W. Bush, provided his view of the meaning of this year's Democratic "Blue Wave." He saw Trump leading Gerson's once conservative Republican Party to permanent irrelevance.

"No serious political prognosticator thinks Trump's appeal to his shrinking group of voters can possibly win national elections 10 or 20 years from now. By making the GOP the party of misogyny, anger

Christmas Tree permits available

If your Christmas spirit gets a boost from going to the woods to cut your own Christmas tree, then the Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management can help out.

With a permit, you can cut a Christmas tree in all the national forests in Montana and on public lands served by BLM's Missoula, Dillon, and Butte field offices. Forest Service offices selling permits in Southwest Montana are located in Philipsburg, Butte, Dillon, Wisdom, Sheridan, and Ennis.

Christmas tree-cutting permits are $5, and each family may purchase up to three permits. Cutting trees without a permit is subject to a citation and fine.

Free Permits for 4th Graders!

As part of the 'Every Kid in a Park' (EKIP) national initiative which strives to connect youth with nature, the Beaverhead-Deerlodge NF and the BLM are offering one free Christmas tree permit to every fourth grader. To participate in the free holiday tree program visit www.every-kidinapark.gov. Fourth graders must present a valid EKIP Pass or paper voucher at their local Forest Service or BLM office (not vendors) to receive their free permit.

Tree cutting is not allowed in wilderness areas or in BLM-administered wilderness study areas.

When you purchase a permit, you will also receive a helpful information sheet that gives advice on how to best cut and care for your Christmas tree. Forest Service and BLM offices are open weekdays, from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

The following locations also sell permits: Hardware Hank in Anaconda and Boulder, Bob Ward and Sons Sporting Goods and Ace Hardware in Butte, I-90 Truck Plaza in Deer Lodge, True Value Hardware in Ennis, Wheat and Thistle in Harrison, Ralph's Exxon in Lima, McLeod Mercantile in Sheridan and Ace Hardware in Whitehall.

You may also buy permits by mail. Send a check for $5 to the nearest Forest Service office (make the check out to "USDA Forest Service") or to the nearest BLM office (make the check out to "USDI Bureau of Land Management"). Be sure to include your name and address.

For more information contact the Forest Service at (406) 683-3900, or the BLM at (406) 533-7600.

with distance from the mining operation.

Hailer said metals are found in larger particulate that registers as PM 10 or greater on air quality monitors. While these larger particles are less likely to end up in the lungs, significant amounts can be swallowed, which Hailer said is a major route of exposure.

Hailer said the individual metals found are known to have the potential to negatively impact human health, but exposure to a "cocktail" of the multiple metals is unknown and should be the subject of further study.

Greeley neighborhood resident Steve McGrath told commissioners he and some other residents had tests done in the last year or so on samples of the dust that accumulates on roofs, cars or other objects left out in yards. He said tests showed the percentages of copper and zinc in the samples were roughly the same as figures published by MR in 2005 about its ore reserves.

Nikia Greene, EPA project manager for the Butte Priority Soils Operable Unit and Westside Priority Soils, said his interpretation of the presentation was that the Greeley residents mainly want to create a focus group, which would include state, federal and local agencies, MR, Atlantic Richfield and other stakeholders. He said he would be "all for" such a group and would be willing to participate.

and bigotry, Trump is systematically alienating large and growing portions of the electorate. He is dividing old from young, and white from minority, and men from women, and rural from urban. And when Republicans are left with a political coalition concentrated among aging, paunchy, male Caucasians (my demographic group), Trump will be long gone from politics. Like many narcissists, he will leave a trail of ruin behind him and care not one whit."

Managing Holiday Stress

Once again, Thanksgiving is here, and we wonder how the holidays arrived so quickly. Some of you are thinking, yes, and my shopping is almost done, everything is planned and figured out and I can just relax and enjoy the season. While others of us are wondering what we are going to do and how we will find the time in our schedules to take on all the extra demands and stressors of the holidays.

If you are one of those who looks at the coming weeks with worry and wonder how you will manage, think of the one thing that is the most bothersome, figure out how to deal with it, and then move on down the list, tackling one stressor at a time. If gift giving is your most difficult task, start there. Then decide if it is the finances, the choices, the number of people to buy gifts for or family expectations.

You can choose to opt out of gift exchanges at work or other groups, especially if you don't feel you have the time and/or money to participate. If your extended family still does extensive gift giving, discuss drawing names and other alternatives to buying for everyone. For immediate family, keep gifts within your budget. If resources are limited, money may be better spent on a trip or other activity where everyone gets to spend quality time together. Have an open and frank family dialogue about expectations and budget.

If time is your biggest worry, sit down, by yourself, or with family members, and figure out what traditions and activities are the most important to you and yours. If things come up that no one is attached to, but you are just used to doing, cross them off the list.

If there are traditions that everyone loves, but time is an issue, delegate, if possible, or try to make it less complicated.

The time piece might apply to decorating, shopping, baking or another holiday custom. For some things, it can be worthwhile to set aside the time, possibly letting something else go till the New Year, and make a treasured holiday tradition happen. Making the decision deliberately and planning for the time will go a long way toward easing the stress that may also be involved.

Priorities may include thinking of those who struggle with the holidays, don't have family to celebrate with or others who don't have the resources needed this time of year. Consider including friends who are alone in a holiday meal. Find time for someone you know who will benefit from some extra support this time of year. Consider contributing food, gifts or dollars to one of the programs out there for those who are less fortunate.

Don't forget that you will not be at your best for doing and thinking of others if you do not take care of yourself. Plan time to get enough sleep, remember to eat healthfully when you are in control of your diet, and stick to your exercise routine. And most importantly, take time to reflect on the true meaning of the Holidays and to be thankful for all you do have.

With these ideas in mind, you may be able to head into the last weeks of the year with a great attitude that will spread to everyone around you. You will have so much to give and the time to enjoy your loved ones. Make this your best holiday season ever by being prepared, spending time on the things that are important to you, and staying on track to be the healthiest and happiest person you can be!

Diabetes Tidbit

Myth- I can control my blood sugars if I eat a low carb diet

This is a myth. We all must consume carbohydrates for our body to function. Carbohydrates include bread, pasta, rice, fruit, vegetables, milk and sugary snacks. Some carbs are much healthier than others such as fruit, whole grains and whole wheat. Our brain will not function if we do not have enough carbohydrates in our body. The key is portion size. There are no foods off limits or "bad foods". Anyone, including people with diabetes, can eat any food they like. It depends on the amount and what other foods are being eaten at that time.

Gratitude
By Debbie Sorensen

Thanksgiving is a very important holiday for me. It breaks my heart that our world has tricked us into skipping over being thankful and grateful. We are bombarded by the banality of Halloween and thrown into the craziness of getting through Turkey Day. We idolize sports and game pools in an effort to keep our minds off of what is really important. Then comes the dive into the Black days of mad shopping and reckless spending to celebrate a December holiday that has completely been derailed from the truth of the meaning for the season.

We've hit a rough patch in our life right now. People throughout our country and the world are going through terrible times and rough patches. We are in this life together and its certainly high time for us to grow up. Let's take responsibility for our actions, but also choose to make a difference when circumstances are out of our control. I want to purpose to stop my crabbing, finger pointing and miserable words. I want to get over being silly. I want to live in a way that will be a good example of faith, truth, joy and what is right. I want to live my life for the King.

I was recently reminded by a friend not to confuse life with God. Life is not fair. But God is. I believe there is a powerful message in that and I want to pay attention.

Please join me in trying out this recipe for gratitude. Hold my feet to the fire. I want to make a difference because the Son of God made a difference for me and saved me by His grace.

My heartfelt wishes to you, are for a Thanksgiving of gratitude and blessings such as you have never known. I pray that through gratitude, we make a difference. Period. S.D.G.

This Week In Labor History

“Radical action must be taken to do away with the efforts of arrogant and selfish greed on the part of the Capitalist.”
- President Teddy Roosevelt, Progressive Republican, Progressive Party founder

Wednesday, Nov 21:

6 unarmed miners striking for better working conditions under the IWW banner are shot and murdered by State Police and hundreds wounded in the Columbine Massacre at Lafayette, Colo. Out of this struggle Colorado coal miners gained lasting Union contracts. (IWW...we never forget.) -1927
The United Auto Workers Union strikes 92 General Motors plants in 50 cities to back up worker demands for a 30-percent raise. An estimated 200,000 workers strike. The auto industry used the war as an excuse to pay slave wages even though they were reaping record profits. -1945

Thursday, Nov 22:

“The Uprising of the 20,000.” Led by 19 year old Clara Lemlich, over 20,000 female garment workers go strike in New York; a Judge tells arrested pickets: “You are on strike against God!” The first major successful strike by female workers in American history, ended in February with Union contracts bringing a reduction in work hours to 52 hours per week and better pay. (...and God was pleased.) -1909
President John F. Kennedy is assassinated. A friend of Labor, Kennedy a year earlier had issued Executive Order 10988, which authorized Unionization and collective bargaining rights for federal workers. Many states would later follow the example set by Kennedy. -1963

Friday, Nov 23:

Army troops, paid by mine owners, were sent to Cripple Creek, Colorado to crush striking WFM coal miners and protect profits. 600 WFM Union members were thrown into a military bullpen, and held for weeks without charges. When a lawyer arrived with a writ of habeas corpus, General Bell, who led the repression, responded “Habeas corpus, hell! We’ll give ‘em post mortems!” When miners complained that the imprisonment was a violation of their constitutional rights, one anti-Union/pro-Capitalist judge replied, “To hell with the Constitution; we’re not following the Constitution!” (The “radical” WFM Union was founded in Butte Montana and would become instrumental in the founding of the IWW) -1903
Workers employed at Walmart, the nation’s largest private-sector employer, strike nationwide for better wages and working conditions. Walmart, whose net sales in 2011 were 443.9 billion, pays its 1.4 million workers in the U.S. an average of 8.81/hour. A third of Walmart’s workers are forced to rely of Government assistance (effectively corporate welfare paid for by the taxpayers). -2012

Saturday, Nov 24:

Anna Louise Strong born on this day, Seattle, Washington, labor activist, author. During the Everett Massacre Strong was hired by the New York Evening Post to report on the bloody conflict between the Industrial Workers of the World (or “Wobblies”) and the army of armed private guards hired by Everett mill owners to protect profits and keep wages low. She soon became an impassioned and articulate spokesperson for workers’ rights. -1885

Mollie Steimer, Unionist, anti-war activist, free-speech campaigner, sentenced to 15-year in prison for handing out pro-peace leaflets, is deported to Soviet Russia. A victim of the Red Scare in America, she was soon a victim of the Red Terror in Russia. -1921

Sunday, Nov 25:

Amid a strike for Union recognition by 395,000 steelworkers, 250 American workers accused of “Communism” were deported to Russia during America’s first “Red Scare”. The Red Scare became an important tool of greedy Capitalists who used peoples fear to crush Union activity and protect profits. -1919
Teachers strike in St. Paul, Minn., the first organized walkout by teachers in the country. The month-long “Strike for Better Schools” involving 1,100 teachers and principals, led to a number of reforms in the way schools were administered and operated. -1946

Monday, Nov 26:

4 months before the Triangle Shirtwaist Factory fire, a sweatshop in Newark, New Jersey, catches fire, killing at least 24 women and girls. 6 young women burn to death and 19 more die when they leap from the fourth-story windows. The fire made national news and more than 100,000 people flocked to the scene the next day. The only door from which the women could flee was locked to protect company profits. A coroner’s jury a month later deemed the fire the result of human error: “They died from misadventure and accident.” -1910

Death of Paul Lafargue, French revolutionary Socialist. He wrote the book “The Right to Be Lazy” about the importance of leisure in 1893 while in prison. -1911

Tuesday, Nov 27:

In West Virginia, during a UMW coal miners’ strike Governor Cornwell proclaims martial law in Mingo County to protect mine owner profits and interests. -1920
The pro-labor musical revue, “Pins & Needles,” opens on Broadway with a cast of Int’l Ladies Garment Workers Union members. Rehearsals were held at night and on weekends, and performances were all on Fridays and Saturdays to appease their bosses (i.e., keep their jobs). It ran for 1,108 performances before closing. In 1962, a 25th anniversary edition of the score was released featuring Barbra Streisand. -1937

The Great Outdoors

Past year provides many reasons to be thankful

By Paul Vang

Tomorrow is Thanksgiving Day and I ask, “Where did the rest of the year go?”
People across the country will be sitting down tomorrow at a table and sharing a festive meal. In fact, people who track these kinds of statistics tell us that 88 percent of our fellow Americans will be eating turkey this Thanksgiving, amounting to an estimated 736 million pounds of turkey meat.
My home state of Minnesota is the country’s leading turkey producer, sending some 46 million turkeys to market each year. My family never got involved with raising turkeys, thankfully. There are a lot of frustrations and risks involved in the process, primarily due to the fact that domestic turkeys are, unlike their wild ancestors, among the dumbest animals in God’s creation. A clap of thunder can send a whole flock of young turkeys stampeding into a corner, suffocating the farmer’s profits. Or, during a rain shower, adolescent turkeys are known to look up to see what that wet stuff is and drown themselves looking up at the sky.

A former co-worker grew up on a farm that did produce turkeys and at Thanksgiving time she’d often say she looked forward to that turkey dinner as an occasion to again get even with those stupid birds that afflicted her childhood.
When we sit down for dinner tomorrow with friends and family we’ll have a rare treat, as my contribution to the groaning table will be the wild turkey that blundered into shotgun range last May. That broke a 30-year drought marked by blunder and failure.
I’m thankful for many things and another year in the outdoors is at the top of the list.
I’m thankful for that turkey, just as I was thankful for the opportunity to catch a muskie a couple weeks later. There are still firsts, even as I approach the evening of a long, happy life.
I’m thankful for good health, not just for myself but our whole family. None of us have had any medical adventures this year, outside of the occasional sniffle or backache. That’s not something we take for granted.

That good health also means I’m thankful for days afield, whether Montana and North Dakota prairies, mountainside aspen thickets, or the trout streams of western Montana. I’ll include the ski slopes at Discovery and public tennis courts in those days afield.
I’m thankful for the opportunity to participate, in a small way, in the political process. I spent many hours this year as a volunteer in some political campaigns, one of many people who donated time and energy in the name of good government. As usual, not all of the candidates or issues I supported won at the polls. Still, it’s a privilege to be a small cog in our great democratic form of government. During my previous career as a federal employee, participation in politics was basically limited to the voting booth.
I’m thankful, as a lover of the outdoors, for leaders who did, and do, so much to preserve our American traditions of public lands and public wildlife. All of us who hunt, fish, hike, camp, or just watch scenery, owe a debt of gratitude to giants such as Theodore Roosevelt, Gifford Pin-chot, John Muir, Aldo Leopold, and others who led the way to preserve our public lands, national parks, wildlife and fisheries. In much of the world, opportunities to recreate in a forest or wade a river are limited to the wealthy and privileged.

I’m thankful to the Founding Fathers of our nation who enshrined basic rights into the framework of our Constitution. For us journalists, Constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech and freedom of the press are the cornerstones of our existence, whether our beat is the White House or outdoor recreation in western Montana. Those guarantees are particularly important now, as they have been during other critical periods in our nation’s history.
So, tomorrow, as we gather with family and friends for a festive Thanksgiving dinner, we will be thankful—but resolute in protecting what is right and good in these United States.

Paul Vang’s book, “Sweeter than Candy, A Hunter’s Journal” is available at Books & Books, Cavanaugh’s County Celtic, The Bookstore in Dillon, or online at <http://writingoutdoors.com>.

The Butte-Silver Bow Archives is hosting two presentations on a selection of photographs from the C. Owen Smithers Photograph Collection. "Feeding Butte in Hard Times" will run at 7:00 p.m. on Tuesday, November 27, and again at the noon Brown Bag Lunch on Wednesday, November 28, in the large auditorium at 17 W. Quartz St. This is the fourth of several themed presentations from the C.O. Smithers Collection. This presentation in photographs relates how Butte took care of feeding its needy during economic hard times and long strikes. A special focus will be on the Hansen Packing Plant south of Butte, which, during the Great Depression, hired hundreds of WPA workers to process meat to feed the country. The photos will be presented by staff archivist Irene Scheidecker, based on the work of volunteers Barb and Reno Parker. Guests are invited to bring a brown bag lunch to the noon presentation. Coffee and water will be served. Attendance is limited to 100 and doors will open thirty minutes before the lecture. For further details, contact the Archives at 406-782-3280.

This week we celebrate Thanksgiving and so the holiday rush begins. This is a good time to remind everyone to think of the Carousel for gifts. You may not know that we have a great selection of items including the Butte Heritage Cook Book, Pat Kearney's Columbia Gardens, Good Night Butte or our adult coloring books. We have discount ride coupons and if you want to give someone the gift of an evening out, we are selling tickets to our Gala, coming up on January 19th, 2019.

Speaking of the Gala have you considered joining us for the evening. We will have dinner from Casagrande's Steak House, a desert auction, and a live auction of donated items. Last week we hosted Chris Fisk's adult education history class. They enjoyed a pasty dinner from Truzzolino's. The program included some little seen videos of the Columbia Gardens. A fellow on the video talked about one of my favorite attractions, the shock machine. On a recent episode of American Pickers they uncovered a duplicate to the one I remember, so they are out there. I am on a personal quest to locate the original or one like it for the Carousel. There are rumors the original survived. I know that a lot of the coin operated games ended up at Tony the Traders. If you haven't visited the Carousel yet stop over and enjoy a scoop of Wilcoxin's Ice Cream, of course we have Licorice and 15 other flavors. Getting to the Carousel is a breeze now. The parking lot is paved and we have a brand new sidewalk leading up to the front door. We still have plenty of work but we plan to add additional activities and attractions as volunteers and time permit. If you would like to volunteer, make a donation, or a memorial our mailing address is PO Box 4133, Butte, MT. Our phone number is 406-494-7817 and our physical address is 3105 Utah Street in Stodden Park. Hope to see you soon.
